Railway officials refuse to locate the plame as yet, but apparently the southound train is at fault.

No. 36 left Charlotte an hour and a half ate, and No. 11 was instructed to take the siding at Harrisburg, which is thirteen miles north of Charlotte. No. 36 passed and was behind in reaching Harrisburg. Just as it had reached the siding No. 36 came thundering down the track at the rate of forty miles an hour.

Apparently neither engineer realized the pending disaster, till it was upon them, for no whistles were blown and the frightful shock of the collision was the first warning the passengers had. They felt the jar of airbrakes suddenly set, and then the trains came together with an awful

Train No. 36 consisted of nine cars. Next to the engine were two express cars filled with fruit and truck bound from Florida or the north: then came two postal cars. a baggage car, first and second-class day coaches, and two Pullman sleepers. No. 11 consisted of four cars-a postal car, a baggage and express car and two coaches. The engine of No. 36 plowed under the engine of No. 11. The two express cars were literally torn to pieces. Both postal cars of No. 36 were wrecked and one of them was sched upon the five-foot embankment. The postal car of No. 11 was piled in splinters about the engine and the baggage car was wrecked.

None of the passenger coaches left the track and none of the passengers were even seriously bruised.

Mail Agent's Heroic Work. The work of rescue was begun at once mail agent named John Hill Carter, of Washington, doing conspicuously heroic work at the peril of his life. He worked in the escaping steam and the burning cars, exploding hand grenades over the wreckage and cutting off the escaping gas just in time to prevent an explosion. He organized a rescue crew before help had come from Charlotte and staid with the wreck even after the work of removing the dead and wounded had been com-not regarded as seriously hurt. The relief train brought the dead and wounded to Charlotte and the wounded are being cared for at St. Peters' home and

The conductor on the southbound train Captain Lovell, received a cut on the head, and several others of the train crew were slightly cut and bruised, but they were able to care for themselves.

The northbound mail train was uninjured. The southbound mail was destroyed. It is presumed that no through mail was in, as it is the custom to transfer through mail at Danville.

Old railroad men declare the wreck the most destructive they have ever seen, the engines and demolished cars being simply unrecognizable scrap. The bell of one of the engines was thrown into a tree some distance away, and splinters of the cars were scattered in every direction.

A track will be built around the wreck, which it will take several days to clear up. The train was brought back to Charlotte tonight and sent north, via Statesville.

United States Senator Money, of Mississippi, who was on his way to Washington; Judge Horne and L. B. Musgrove, of Birmingham, Ala. They were outspoken in their praises of the heroism of Mail Agent Carter and declared that but for his coolness and courage there would have been a fire which would have roasted the wounded, incinerated the dead and destroyed the mail matter.

It is conceded that the two express cars of fruit and truck, which were taken on at Charlotte, and which were placed next the engine, alone saved No. 36 from adding to the list of fatalities.

Just Around a Curve.

The track for a mile or so approaching Harrisburg is perfectly straight, except at one point, where there is a small curve and a cut. The track at Harrisburg can be plainly seen for more than a mile, approaching from this side. Tunstall, who was, of course, on the outlook for No. 11, kent his eye on the distant siding, expecting every minute to see No. 11 run into it, but train appearing, and having the right of wav. he steamed ahead at the rate of forty-five miles an hour, losing sight of the track by reason of the topography of the track by reason of the topography of These farms contain a total area of about the country at the siding, as he neared the 3,800,000 acres, one-half of which is in Miscut. No. 11, the local passenger, left Concord late. It had orders, so one of the trainmen says, to meet No. 36 at Harrisburg at 11:14. It had slowed up preparatory to running into the siding, and was only a hundred yards from the north end of the switch when No. 36 dashed into the deadly crash came. The crash was heard for miles around and the noise was like that of a sharp crack of thunder. There were ninety-five passengers on 36. As soon as they felt the far of the air brakes they knew something was wrong. Several of them were thrown forward in their seats, but none of them were hurt. The instant the train stopped they tumped out to see what had happened. The scene that met their eyes beggared description. There were the two great engines piled one above the other so that the headlight one one-No. 11-was up among the telegraph wires; the two express cars of No. 36 were splintered into a thousand pieces, hardly a piece as big as a man's arm being left. In less than three minutes, the postal car of No. 11 was on fire and but for the bottles of chemicals at hand and the heroic work of the Postal Clerk John Hill Carter, both trains would have been in flames in

Could Not Rescue Him.

Out of the rear part of the postal car No. 11, which was demolished by the engine of No. 36, hung Postal Clerk Benton, head downward. His body was out of the car, but his legs were pinioned in under the engine, and so close to the boiler that he was being burned by the heat and steam. He begged piteously to be ex-scalded to death."

Three jacks were placed upder the gine, and the passengers worked hard, but there for an hour and a half he hung. The only relief given him while in this frightful situation was the keeping of his body wet with cold water. A bucket brigade was formed and bucket after bucket was thrown on him, but it could not counteract the efforts of the steam. He lived twenty minutes after bing takn out. His agony was frightful. He refused to take any spirits, saying that he would soon be dead and that it was not worth while. When asked whether he wanted to be taken to the hospital or his home, he said:

"I will be dead; it will not matter." He told the by-standers of his wife and children in Charlotte and with their names upon his lips, expired.

The body of Fireman Donaldson, of No 36. was found in the center of the wreck. His head was mashed perfectly flat and his body was a mass of pulp. One arm could not be found for some time. Clyde Eudy was found about the center

VALUE OF CROPS SUBMERGED Report Shows the Worth of the Products of Flooded Section.

THE LOSS RUNS INTO ENORMOUS FIGURES

Compared with the Output of 1896 the Sufferers Are Shown To Be Ruined in Many Places.

Washington, April 11 .- A statement relative to the agricultural interests of the submerged districts of the Mississippi valley south of Cairo, Ill., has been issued by the department of agriculture.

It is based upon a chart prepared under the direction of the chief of weather bureau, showing the extent of the flood on April 6th. To this chart the department has applied the crop statistics of 1896 as representing more closely than any other available data the acreage and value of the crops of 1897 now in jeopardy.

The statistics of population, of number and acreage of farms and of the value of farms and farm implements are those of the census and the statistics of live stock are the department's own figures for Jan

The area under water on April 6th wa about 15,800 square miles, of which 7,900 square miles was in Mississippi, 4,500 square miles in Arkansas, 1,750 square miles in Missouri, 1,200 square miles in Tennessee and 450 square miles in Louisiana. This region contained in 1990, so far as can be determined, in view of the some what indefinite boundary lines of the flood, a population of 379,685, of which 186,498, or about one-half, was in Mississippi, 100,235 in Arkansas and the remainder almost equally divided between Missouri and Tennessee. Taking the entire region the colored population outnumbered the whites in the proportion of twelve to seven, the colored preominating in the flooded districts of Mississippi in the ratio of more than five to one and in Arkansas in that of two to one In Missourt and Tennessee the population of the flooded districts is largely white,

The total valus of these farms, with their improvements farm implements, etc., is close upon $65.000,000, and here also the proportions in the different states are about the same as above

The live stock on hand January 1st of the present year was valued at over $7,-500,000, divided into very much the same proportion as other farm property. It is estimated that of the crops of last year over three and three-quarter million dollars worth remained on hand in the submerged regions on the last day of the month, cotton representing about two-thirds of unt and corn practically all the

The largest interests at stake so far are those of Mississippi, whose flooded districts represent an invested capital in agriculture alone of cloe upon $42,000,000. Over 18,000 farms, containing two million acres of land, of an average value of about $18 an acre, water in the country lying between the Mississippi and Yazoo including some of the most productiv of the state. Their live stock, even at the present low prices, is worth nearly three and one-half million dollars, and the farm-ers and planters are estimated to have about $2,000,000 worth of the crops of last year still on hand. Arkansas stands next in the extent of its imperiled interests, nearly 10,000 farms, containing 1,000,000 acres of land, worth over $1,500,000, and crops unsold and unned to the value of nearly $900,000, lands representing a value not far short

The aggicultural interests affected in Missouri represents a total capital of over $9,000,000, the 5,300 submerged farms containing an area of about 470,000 acres, worth about $7,250,000,000; the live stock crops on hand another $500,000.

Tennessee is not far behind Missouri in the extent of its imperiled interests, the number of acreage of the submerged farms being very nearly the same. The entire value, including $1,250,000 for live stock, and $400,000 for crops on hand, is over $8,500,000. What effect the flood will have upon the the length of its continuance and the practicability of wheat planting after the sub-sidence of the flood.

The entire region under water on April 6th, produced last year about 370,000 bales of cotton, valued at close on to $13,000,000; over 11,000,000 bushels of corn, worth about 3,400,000, and wheat, potatoes and hay worth over $800,000 more. The most valuable portion of these crops was raised in of cotton, besides other products, most for

MOVING TOWARD THE EQUATORIAL LAKES

Dervishes Are the Ultimate (Object of the Expedition and Some Fighting Is Expected.

Brazzaville, Africa, January 31.-Corre spondence of the Associated Press.—I have been waiting many days for some authentic news about Merchandis's expedition. The leaders were at Brazzaville when I arrived on the coast. The road between Manyanga and Brazzaville, a distance of about seventy-five miles, was closed on accounof the petty wars among the natives and Merchandis's men couldn't get 3,000 loads of supplies up to Brazzaville to proceed on their journey up the Mobangi river toward the equator. As a last resort Merchandis burned every village on the Manyanga road, killing a few hundred natives and taking all their live stock and food. In coming up from the coast we learned that forty natives had stopped the white men and their carriers at the crossing of the Quello river. We were in no mood to be stopped, as our food supply was nearly exhausted, we having been delayed on the road by severe rain storms, which had overflowed the rivers and creeks, so when the natives stopped us we loaded our rifles before them, advanced threateningly and told them that the first one who inter the blockade with carriers and supplies without any difficulty.

Details of the Battle. Upon arriving at Brazzaville we found Merchandis making preparations to go to the relief of the men at the Quello river the relief of the men at the Quello river crossing. This was the pretext for declaring war against the natives. The details of the battles were received from one of his soldiers who returned here. The first real skirmish was with a chief named Mobyalla, who, or some of his tribe, killed a French soldier about a year ago. Merchandis's men marched on the village. Mobyalla showed resistance, but he film locks were not equal to modern rifles. Mobyalla was wounded and his head was cut off and brought to Brazzaville. The natives say over one hundred men were killoff and brought to Brazzaville. The natives say over one hundred men were killed in this village, but Merchandis's soldiers assert that the number was not more than twenty-five of fifty. After the battle the village was burned. Continuing their march, the villages along the Manyanga road were surrounded at night. As daylight appeared the natives were awakened by the blast of a trumpet, as they came out of their huts they were shot down or all sides. Village after village was destroyed in this manner, no quarter being given. The natives used clay balls in their old muskets, having burned them to about the consistency of bricks. In shooting they do not put the gun to the shoulder or look at the sight, but point at the object as one would with a stick, and then fire. Several of Merchandis's men were struck by these clay balls, but were not seriously wounded. The expedition consists of fourteen white officers and one hundred and sixty-three officers and one hundred and sixty-three black soldiers from the western Soudan, called Senegalese, but who are by right Soudanese. They arrived at Loango, on the coast, July 24, 1896. Merchandis and some of the white officers came direct to Brazza-ville, but the main body did not succeed in getting here until January 12th. Still Marching On. Preparations are now making to continue e march up the Mobangi. Captain Dhanis has charge of a force which is marchin to the equatorial lakes and the source of the Nile on Henry M. Stanley's old trail, up the river Aruwimi. Captain Dhanis is the man who had charge of the expedition of the Congo state that cleared the Arabs out in the upper Congo, back of Stanley falls. Rashid is now a prisoner on the Kassis river, a thousand miles away. He is closely watched and has no hopes of escap-ing. Another expedition under the leader-ship of M. Gentile, which started out from ere some time ago, is blockeded on on of the small rivers which empties into the Mobangi where it turns south toward the Congo. The latest word from him is that his expedition is short of provisions and his position critical. The object of the Merchandis expedition is to march to the head waters of the Mo-bangl, cross over to the headwaters of the Nile and attack the Dervishes or Arabs, from another point. The expeditions while this section and checkmate the English in the French Congo with Lake Tchad

The rendezvous was at Koniskos, a viifully armed and wore the national costume, their black fur caps bearing the badge and initials of the Eth Nike Hetai-ria embroidered in blue and white with the words: "En Tonto Nika" crossing the initials in black.

On Friday a monk from Mount Athos, assisted by his abbot and two deacons, held a religious service at Koniskas, at which all members of the invading body particular to the service of the partook of the sacrament and registered the oath of the order—"liberty or death In addition to large quantities of ammun ion and provisions the force had £3,000 gold. During Friday night following the service the frontier was crossed, moving in the direction of Scuik. While this movement was in progress a second band, the number of which is yet unknown, had a number of which is yet unknown, had a rendezvous at Neseros, on the frontier, about thirty-five kilometres north of Laris-sa, and near the coast. This band was sim-llarly equipped, had a similar mission and took the same oath. It was commanded by the Macedonian Chie: Sinsinikos. It crossed the frontier on Thursday night, marching on Karya. As everywhere in the Vale of Tem this portion of the frontier the roads and bridges are in a condition of thorough repair. This (Sunday) morning the roar of artillery can be plainly heard at Laris-sa from the direction of Karya, where Sinsinikos is evidently forcing matters.

Greece's Determination. General Makris and his staff, with some knowledge of the movements afoot, which they were unwilling to part, left yesterday for Tyrnavos, the most important Greek position near Elassona. Four batteries of re-enforcements followed today for the sa oint. At headquarters they declare that nothing is known as to the raid and will say nothing as to the probable character of the raiders. However, some additiona light has been thrown on the subject today by an interview between the representative of the Associated Press and a prominent Greek, who is evidently in close touch with the league and its plans. The Greek said:
"The movement of these bands is all in accordance with a very clearly defined programme. For years thousands of Greeks, even little children, on receiving a shilling, have been in the habit of putting half of it into a national 50x in the cause of Pan-Hellenism. For many months it has been the plan of the league to stir up all the Pan-Hellenic people by means of armed bands. Letters Came Each Day from the Wife of Wylie and These Told the Story of Her Secret Marriage. Amount of Shortage Not Yet Known.

and love, a secret marriage, the appropriation of the funds of another and a hasty flight under the shadow of his misdoings the pathetic story which is told of Thomas W. Wylle's recent mysterious disappearance from the city.

Young Thomas W. Wylle has been con nected with the accident department of the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of which Mr. Charles Thorn is the general manager Thomas Wylie is a son of Henry Wylle, who is well known in the city. Wylle is a young man about nincteen years old and one of the best known young business men in the city. He has for s long while held a responsible position in Mr. Charles Thorn's office, and in the ordinary course of his business he handled great deal of money. He has disappeared from the city and his hasty departure has disrupted some startling revelations. it is claimed, which are both tragic and pathetic to a wonderful degree. The whole act embracing Wylle's down fall is set in a background of thrilling scenes and rangula with motives of a re-color. It was not a shored when too a crai days but there was a marvelous stor in the flight of Thomas Wylie, but he acts have been tangled so badly by his own hands and his tracks so completely covered for a season by his unfalling cunning that it has been almost impo probe into the real truth of the story. Wylle has not only wrongfully appropriated the funds of the Aetna Accident

Life Insurance Company, it is said, but he has induced one of the fairest and most beautiful young women in a neighboring lle has fled and the poor girl who loved and honored his name is now prostrated over the awful revelations which are being made. The marriage was kept such a profound secret that no intimation of it was had by any one until after Wylie's flight. It came to Mr. Thorn in a rather singular way and at first the evidences it were entirely ignored by him until his skepticism was completely weighted down with data which could not be diswith the girl and never for a moment suspected that there was anything between the two until the short, square letters in her fine feminine hand came regularly to his office after Wylle's departure. He noticed the postmark closely and after a number of them had accumulated he began to investigate the matter. The girl Miss Willie Lambert, of Jonesboro, and is only about fifteen years old. When Mr. Thorn had discovered beyond question that Thomas Wylie had embezzled and in order to escape the responsibility of his rash deed had taken to the woods, he began to inquire into the case of Miss Lambert. He became firmly convinced that there was something radically wrong and he wrote her to come to Atlanta. He did not tell her his reasons for making such a request, but there was enough in ter to bring the girl, whose letters had been unanswered for nearly two weeks, on the first train. She came to the city early yesterday morning and went direct to Mr. Thorn's office in the Equitable building. Her face was flushed with the excitement of her trip and she rushed into Mr. Thorn's private office. "What on earth is the matter, Mr. Thorn?" inquired the several weeks ago by Judge Landrum. The story of Wylle's shortage is not complete and it is stated that the definite amount of his appropriation has not been ascertained. Mr. Thorn never suspected Wylle of any wrong doing until last Fri-day one week ago, when one of his policyholders met him on the street and informed him that a certain bill had been paid. Mr. Thorn, when he returned to the office, questioned Wylle in regard to the matter and although there was a considerable amount of hes.tancy in the speech of his clerk, he still did not believe that there was anything seriously wrong. Big Bomb Found Under a House in Eastern Part of City.

WOMEN APPEAL TO THE POLICE CHIEF

Heavy Guards Are Now Watching the Town and Warrants Are Out for Suspected Parties.

Gadsden, Ala., April 11.-(Special.)-Following upon the destruction Saturday morning with dynamite of the house oc cupied by the Jones girls, the big hoisting engine of the Christopher coal mines was blown to pieces by the same explosive this morning.

Everything attached to the machinery was shattered and an entirely new outfit will be necessary. The owner estimates his loss at $2,500.

Charles Johnson, who was arrested for dynamiting the Jones's house, claims that he can easily prove an alib!. Will Flood and John Jones, two well-known white boys, are being looked for by the sheriff and police, there being warrants for their arrest on the same charge.

This afternoon a bomb was found under a house in the eastern part of the city and it caused a regular stampede of women to the police for protection.

Extra officers have been put on duty; the sheriff and his deputies are on guard, while a deputation of citizens is guarding isolated houses.

There is no cause or theory advanced for the vandalism, nor is it generally believed that those for whom warrants are issued are guilty.

Flower Farms.
From The Philadelphia Inquirer.
The delightful labor of flower farming is steadily on the increase among the people of the Scilly isles, the astonishing quantity of forty-one tons of cut blossoms, chiefly narcissus, being sent over to England weekly during the winter season. The farms, which employ many hands and much capital, are excessively interesting, and the sight of them in February or March is worth even the risk of a rough voyage. Literally millions of white and yellow blossoms, richiy fragrant, nestle between tall hedges of euopymus and veronica, and form a fragrant picture—exquisite as it is unique.

Tom Parker Charged with Train Wrecking at McComb's.

HE HAS CONFESSED THE DEED But It Is Thought He Will Deny That

He Did So. WIFE MURDERER ALSO TO BE TRIED

He Is Chris Calias, the Greek Who Slew His Wife in Birmingham Several Weeks Ago.

Birmingham, Ala., April 11 .- (Special.)-Two important cases will be taken up in the courts here tomorrow. Tom Parker colored, will be put on trial in the criminal court on a charge of attempting to wreck a Southern train on a trestle. As will be bered by Constitution readers, he is one of the men who were arrested charged with turning a rail on the Mo which came near causing a train on the Mclanta, heavily loaded with passengers, to go down beneath, eighty feet. Parker made statement, and in it he stated that he and another negro pulled a rail in order to get some Christmas money. The other negro was tried and was convicted. He is ppealing the case now. Parker, it is thought, will make a denial of the tob now, and contradict the confession made. He may plead guilty and take a light sentence. Chris Colias, the Greek who filled his unfaithful wife full of bullets, causing her leath in a few moments, and who attempted suicide immediately thereafter by shooting himself, will be tried tomorrow also, in the circuit court on a charge of murder, He was given a preliminary trial and disrearrested on an indictment returned by a grand jury. He will plead temporary insanity, it being averred that at the time the murder was committed he made the discovery that his wife was unfaithful to him and was in a compromising position with a man. The woman was of low character when Colias married her a couple of years ago, but he tried to reform her. Co lias has the sympathy of many friends.

The Polar Snow Cap of Mars. From Nature.

We have received the following inform We have received the following information from America: "A telegram received at Harvard observatory on January 11 from Lowell observatory, now located near the City of Mexico, says that a rift has been observed since January 7th in the north polar cap of Mars in longitude 40." This "rift" is probably similar to those observed at the opposition of 1894 in the southern cap. Professor W. H. Pickering, with a six-inch telescope, found one on May 22d, crossing the cap from longitude 330 to 170. This grew considerable in size, measurements made on June 6th and 15th indicating a width of 100 and 250 miles, respectively. width of 100 and 350 miles, respectively fr. Douglas also during the same month Mr. Douglas also during the same month, June 10th, detected a second and third rift, the latter running from longitude 170 to 90. The sequence of phenomena observed seems to indicate that they are due to the lower levels at the poles being uncovered; in this way, as the snow melts, the bare ground is exposed, appearing dark in contrast to the snow still lying on the more elevated heights. Their broadening then is a natural result of the departing snow, and indicates that the polar cap is at that time in a far wanced state of disintegration.

ARE AFTER HANNA'S SCALP A SECRET MEETING HELD BY MC KISSON-FORAKER FACTION.

They Will Try and Prevent the Election of Legislators Who Favor Hanna for the Senate.

Cleveland, O., April 11.—(Special.)—The McKisson-Foraker faction of the republican party in this county have declared enator M. A. Hanna and the latter will not go back to the United States enate without a hard fight being made. The McKisson people claim that Hanna bolted them in the recent municipal election when McKisson was re-elected, and they are now out for Hanna's scalp and are determined to prevent Hanna from capturing the county convention which will elect delegates to the state convention where Mr. Hanna hopes to be indorsed. They are equally determined to prevent any legislators from being elected to the next assembly except from their own faction. To this end, in order to offset the organization of the Hanna forces, which was completed Friday night, the McKis on leaders held a secret meeting this afternoon in the Forest City house. Be sides Mayor McKisson and the members of his cabinet, Congressman Burton and Chairman Taft, of the republican executive committee, were present and plans for the future were carefully considered. The meeting was very secret, the men coming singly and entering the hotel by means of a side door.

From an authoritative source it was earned that if any advances are to be made they must come from Hanna.

Be a Pearl Bryan Murder. Mount Vernon, Ill., April 11.-Boys pass ing through some woodland, five miles northwest of the city, today found a woman's head lying near the public road lead ing from Mount Vernon to Richview. The body was found two hundred yards from the spot where the head lay with the flesh stripped from the bones, both the trunk and head being so badly decompos ed as to render recognition impossible. The testimony at the inquest today went to prove that the body was that of a wo man who was in that locality early last November. She refused to divulge her name, but said her home was in Carmi Ill., and that she was going to St. Louis. The theory is that another Pearl Bryan murder has been committed. It is said spected party left the county about the date the woman disappeared.

PREACHER ROASTS THE BISHOPS. Minister Declares He Won't Have an Appointment Given.

Oneoneta, N. Y., April 11 .- J. C. Hogan, of Scranton, Pa., who for the past two years has refused to take his appointment in the Wyoming conference, of which he was a member, claiming that he was being discriminated against because he was a prohibitionist, and who withdrew therefrom on Friday last, addressed a big crowd at the Metropolitan theater today.

His first criticism was that the conference failed to make public his reasons for withdrawing, Intimating that they were afraid to do so. He then proceeded to read his reasons. Among other things he "The position and reputation of a faithful preacher of salvation and righteousness cannot be safe in the keeping willfully sinful and partisan bishops and presiding elders." He alleged that the church was in complicity with the liquor traffic and that a vast majority of bishops, pastors and voting members of the Methodist Episcopal church cast their influence and balots for the representatives of liquor traffic, showing that they were hirelings and not shepherds. He said that the conference desired his parchments. He wanted first to mark them. He proceeded then to burn the name of the bishops who ordained him from the certificates, saying that he would as soon have the signature of the meanest rum seller in the state attached to them.

A Haunted Tree.

From The Danville, Ky., Advocate.

Last fall a party of coon hunters from this city were in the woods in this vicinity, and the dogs hunted splendidly until they struck this old tree. There they tucked their tails between their legs and simply flew. They whined and gave other evidences of fear, and could not be coaxed into hunting any more that night. Finally the hunting any more that night. Finally hunters themselves became scared. One themselves became scared. One of clared he heard the sound of a voice as if from some soul in deep distress. This settled it. Every man in the crowd suddenly remembered that he had business in town, and townward the whole lay-o proceeded without further parleying or los of time. The next day an old gentleman residing in Danville was told of the oc-currence, and he recalled the fact that he had been one of a party which had a simihad been one of a party which had a similar experience near this old tree three years ago, and he said that the spot had been haunted for several years. A long time ago an old gentleman by the name of Louis Streat was murdered for his money, and the murderer had dragged the body to the foot of this tree and covered it with dead leaves. The murderer was never punished by law. A young man named Henderson was arrested, charged with the crime, and at his examining trial was liberated on $5,000 ball. He jumped his bond and disappeared some time afterhis bond and disappeared some time after Wildest and Porcupine.

A large wildcat that had gone hungry three days sneaked down the big beec ridge above Balygump, Me., with its fac screwed into as ugly a sneer as ever a wildcat wore. Beyond the ridge, where the ground sank into a gully-like swamp, the wildcat found a fat porcupine on the ground. The cat evidently found the por cupine tempting to look on, for it promptly went on the hunt with all the craft it could exercise. Behind a hummock, along a snow ridge, over a fallen log, and through a sprinkling of bush tops, the cat made its way and approached the porcupine. Then it sprang and gripped its claws on its prey. It sought to roll the porcupine over, so as to bite it on the belly. It succeeded only partially and filled ly. It succeeded only partially, and filled its jaws full of short quills from the por-cupine's side. The porcupine died quick-ly, but the wildcat, with its jaws distended with the guills, coult not eat the meat

From The Portland Oregonian.

For the past week or so there has been scarcely any chinook salmon on the market, but yesterday morning quite a number were received. About every dealer had some, and one had ten beauties, weighing forty or fifty pounds each, on exhibition. They were soon disposed of, for Oregonians have a great liking for this delicious fish at this time of the year. There is also a fine supply of trout in the market, the equal of which cannot probably be found in any other market at this season. They come by the boxful; salmon trout from the rivers tributary to Willipa harbor, principally, the number caught in fac Columbia being much less than it used to be. There is also a sort of sea trout, from the sound, by many considered to be young salmon, which have flesh of a deeper pink than most salmon and are in fine condition and of excellent flavor. Dolly Varden trout are not plentiful, but occasionally specimens weighing five or six pounds are seen. Of course, there are no mountain trout in market now, unless they are large enough to pass for salmon trout. Columbia river smelt are plentiful, and there is a fair assortment of saltwater fish, halibut, cod, rock cod, sole, flounders, etc., but chinook salmon and trout are preferred to any of them. At Greenville the river, as well as the backwater surrounding the town, is stationary tonight. Everything is in readiness for the receipt and distribution of provisions from the government and as soon as the army officers arrive the work will be actively entered into. Freight Train Jumps the Track-No One Hurt, but a Passenger Train Was Delayed Nine Hours.

Macon, Ga., April 11.-(Special.)-Mary Carter, colored, who shot John Smith, colored, was arrested this morning about halfpast 11 o'clock as she was getting off the Macon and Birmingham train on Pine street. The arrest was made by Officer John Travers, who knew the woman. She was about to enter a hack to be driven te some point in the city when the officer took her in charge and sent her to the city barracks.

A few weeks ago the woman made desperate attempt to kill her lover, John Smith, in a fit of jealousy, at the oaggage room of the Southern railway depot, where he was a porter. It was a bold attempt murder, and was perpetrated about o'clock in the morning. She fired with pistol at Smith four times. Three of the balls took effect, and it was thought Smith ould die from one of the wounds, but recovered and now says he does not care to prosecute the woman. Immediately after the shooting the woman fled, went relatives in Belleview, on the outskirts the city, and then boarded the Macon and Birmingham train and went to Thomasion, where she has been staying until today, when she concluded to return to Macon, thinking the matter had blown over. She says John Smith wrote to her to return to Macon, as he would not prosecute her. She says she wrote him a letter in reply, telling him to meet her today but he says he never received the letter The shooting created much excitement at the time on account of its boldness and the public place where it occurred.

Rome, Ga., April 11.—(Special.)—One of the most picturesque figures in the history of Floyd county passed away this morning in the death of Mr. M. M. Landrum. CONTEST FOR CORONER'S FEES. Novel Suit in the Court of Floyd County.

Rome, Ga., April 11.—(Special.)—One of the most peculiar contests ever inaugurated in a Floyd county court came to an end yesterday. About two months ago Coroner Fred Schlopboch held two inquests, one over the body of Clio McLendon. who was killed by a Southern switch engine, and the other over the body of a negro named Whitehead, who was killed in a fight with a friend named Tucker. When the coroner presented his bills of costs the board of county commissioners refused to pay ner presented his bills of costs the board of county commissioners refused to pay either one and the coroner at once entered suit in the justice court to recover his costs in the two cases.

The justice decided that the coroner was entitled to his fee in the McLendon case, as there were no witnesses, but that he was not entitled to anything in the Whitehead case, because there was a witness.

Tucker, the slayer of Whitehead, is now in jail awaiting a trial for murder, and in jail awaiting a trial for murder, and it seems very probable that he would not be there but for the coroner's inquest, as he had not been arrested up to the time of the inquest and was claiming that the oting was accidental.

The two cases have attracted a good deal of attention in Rome. Lawyers are pretty much divided upon the question.

VESSELS WILL BE WATCHED. Surgeon Burford Will Soon Resume at Brunswick Quarantine.

Brunswick, Ga., April 11.—(Special.)—On May 1st, Surgeon R. E. L. Burford will go into his annual six months' voluntary retirement at the national quarantine. This means that the extraordinary and rigid precautions used by the United States govrnment to protect this city from contagiernment to protect this city from contagi-ous diseases via vessels from foreign coun-tries will again be resumed. The coming six months' period of hot days will be watched more strictly than ever before. Climatic and sanitary conditions in Cuba under ordinary circumstances make that island a particularly menacing spot to southern states' inhabitants. The war prevailing there now has greatly enhanced that danger. Late consular bills of health from Havana show no decrease in yellow fever and small pox cases. Brunswick is particularly fortunate in having her health guarded by the national authorities. It costs nothing to the city, and the vessels arriving receive free of charge all nec-essary treatment. Heretofore it cost each vessel heavily to undergo fumigation and disinfection. This tax on vessels was costly to them, and its being abolished has brought many more vessels here than before. Brunswick protested when the government took charge of its quarantine, and thought it an interference in municipal affairs. Her officials and citizens blamed Savannah for preferring charges that made the government take hold. Now the city is delighted with the arrangement. It is a well-known fact that Savannahians laughed in their sleeves when they thought they had put Brunswick in trouble by having the authorities take charge of her quarantine. It is also well known that Brun-wick's free entries compared with Savannah's heavy charges were so detrimental to the latter named port's interests that out success, to take her quarantine too. It costs Savannah about $6,000 per annum to operate her quarantine, against at Brunswick. At Savannah the vessels are taxed to make this good. At Brunswick they pay nothing. The system of guarding public health, observed by the Marine hospital service, is arranged in this manner: Cable advices from all foreign ports where there are contagious diseases, are regularly forwarded through the surgeon general's office at Washington to the various stations.

The health of the entire world is thus kept before the surgeons in charge. During the warm period every port is watched carefully, and all vessels arriv-ing from foreign shores are detained for seven days regardless of where they are from. They are put through a course of disinfection, and after the lapse of that time, if everything is clear, they are given a clear bill of health and allowed to proceed to their wharves to load. In cases of vessels arriving from Havana, Santos or other equally suspicious ports, the sur-veillance accorded them is more rigid and their detention longer.

At quarantine the captain and crew are housed ashore, and the vessel's ballast dis-charged. Then the disinfecting process commences. The hold and between decks are swept clear, a hose and nozzle connecting with the bichloride tank in the pumping station brought across, and the vessels inside drenched with the solution. After this the hatches are tightly closed ard a galvanized iron pipe, eight inches in diameter, is laid over to an opening. This pipe is connected with a double sulphur furnace with reservoir and suction fan, by which sulphur fumes are conveyed throughout the vessel.

The clothing of all descriptions, and that the end of the detention period the vessel

A convention of the patrons of the coun schools of Muscogee county has been called for the first Saturday in May, the object being to get the consensus of pub-lic opinion in this county as to the advisability of adopting a uniform system of textbooks throughout the state. The gathering was called by County School Com sioner Johnson, who wished to get the sen-timent of the people of the county on this important issue. The majority of the achers of the county appear to oppose the idea of a uniform system in the state.

There will be a teachers' institute, com sed of this and surrounding counties, a Warm Springs on June 21st. It will last until the Georgia Teachers' Association nvenes on the 26th.

INCREASED POSTAL RECEIPTS. That's What Columbus Postmaster Shows in Report.

Columbus, Ga., April 11.—(Special.)—Captain William Redd, Columbus's efficient postmaster, has just forwarded to Washington his report for the fiscal year ending April 1st. The report shows that the Co-lumbus postoffice is in a good condition, the receipts last year being larger than during the previous year. Last year the gross receipts were $27,468.06, against $28,-986.75 the previous year, a gain of $479.31. The total expenses for the year were $14,-674.75. a decrease of $1,180.11 from the previous year's expenditures. The net revenue for the year was $12,791.31, an increase of $1,659.42 over the previous year. Last year the expenses took up 53 per cent of the receipts. The preceding year the percentage was 59 per cent.

lowing Saturday when Wylie went to Mr Thorn for his week's salary it amounted to $16, and he asked him to simply give his note for $20 for thirty days and that he would take it out to some bank and have it discounted. Mr. . Thorn agreed to this and it seems Wylie took the original $20 note, which was drawn on a Capital City bank blank, to Moody, in Temple Court, and had it discounted there. He was not satisfied with this and before disposing of the original note to Moody drew up an exact duplicate of it and passed that off on the bank on which the first one was

There is another case, it is said, where he forged Mr. Thorn's name to a note of Louis Goldstine for $37.50 and passed it off on the Atlanta National bank. He also forged a note for $15, which he passed on Schaul, the pawn broker on Decatur street. Mr. Thorn has been unable to ascertain the full amount of Wylle's shortage for the reason that when the young man left he took with him the key to the big inside doors of the office safe and so far it has been impossible to get at the records to estimate the full extent of the loss. The first paper found which threw any light on the case at all was the marriage license, which was in Wylie's desk. It is thought that the shortage will foot up comparatively small.

This is the full story of the doings of Wylle as told by Mr. Thorn. What steps he will take he does not know.

HYPNOTIC TEST AT WAYCROSS. Young Man Put To Sleep for Tewnty-Four Hours.

Waycross, Ga., April 11.—Mesmerism, hypnotism and mind-reading have held the curlous-minded people here in a mystic spell for several days. A professor of these sciences was here Thursday, Friday and Saturday, giving exhibitions in his room at the hotel and at the Johnson opera house. The house was thronged each night and wierd, wonderful feats were performed in mind-reading and hypnotism. Joe Chastaine, a popular young man here, was hypnotized and put into a twenty-four-hour mesmeric trance and kept on exhi-bition in the show window of the Waycross clothing store. Hundreds of person visited the sleeper and curious crowds were gazing at him day and night. Physiclans here examined him. One of them tested his sleep and did not arouse him. Cruel needles were stuck into his body and other tests were made by various persons. The sleeper breathed regularly and seemed to be in a profound sleep. After staying on exhibition the proper length of time young Chastaine was removed on his bed to the opera house and put on the stage before a large audience. At 11 o'clock, just twenty-four hours after he had been put to sleep, he was awakened by the professor. Half a dozen men were required to hold him after he was awakened. The young man seemed to be horror-stricken. His guards were fought by him, and it was with difficulty that he was overpowered. After a few moments he was himself again and he stated that he felt like he had only been asleep a few hours. Of his trance he knew nothing in detail. The twenty-four hours vigil was kept by Clifford Beaton and Percy Felt-ham, friends of young Chastaine, and Manager Ives, who say he slept soundly during the whole time and was restless during the last few hours. Mr. Chastaine this morning, in discussing the matter with The Constitution correspondent, said: last recollection was this command of the professor: 'Sleep. You will sleep sound.'
I do not remember having had any dreams. or hearing anything, and the time seemed to be the same as a natural sleep of five or six hours, judging from my feelings after awakening. My first recollection of my awakening was the professor's command for me to awake. I opened my eyes and was horrified at being tightly held to my fice, and I struggled desperately for my freedom. I remembered then my situation, and supposed that the audience before me was the same one before which I had been

SOME OF THE ROSTON STATUES. Most of Them Commemorate Historic

Achievements.

From Boston Letter to Chicago Times-Democrat. The visitor to Boston, whatever he may hink of the architecture here, is not likely to be impressed by the number or grandeur of our open-air monuments. Yet there are more than thirty, and if the stranger knows just where to look for them he can pass his judgment on their faults or merits.

It has been remarked, as a curious thing, that in a city so devoted to music and art there has not yet been erected a statue to a literary man, a musician or an artist. We have a fair number of patriotic and political statues, but Chicago and New York have done better than Boston in hon-ring the muses.

Earliest as well as greatest of all is Bunker Hill monument, for although not finished until 1843, it was begun in 1825. The plain granite obelisk, with its height of 222 feet, is too well known to need description here. Next in order are two diminutive statues of Columbus and Aris-tides in Louisburg square. They were imported from Italy and presented to the city by Joseph Iasigri, a merchant of the past generation. The first portrait statue was erected in front of the city hall in 1856. This is R. S. Greenough's statue of Franklin, in bronze. It was paid for by popular subscription of $20,000. Wendell Phillips liked it as little as he liked its neighbor, Quincy, but most critics prais-The staue of Daniel Webster in the statehouse yard is by Hiram Powers. It was erected at a cost of $10,000, raised by popu-lar subscription. From beginning it excited so much adverse criticism that Everett, in his oration at the unvailing, felt called upon to defend it. The head is said to be a good likeness, but in other respects it is stiff and uninteresting. Phillips called t "that man of ugly iron." The statue of Horace Mann, also in front of the statehouse, was paid for by sub-scriptions from the school children of the state. It is by Emma Stebbins and has been both harshly and favorably criticised. Wendell Phillips said that he looked "as if waked up so suddenly that in a hurry he had brought half his bed clothes clinging to his arms and legs." The statue of Alexander Hamilton is the finest one met at the entrance of Commonwealth avenue. It is the earliest statue in this country to be cut from granite, and was designed by Dr. Runnier, who had more than a lo-cal reputation. This statue is not thought to show the artist at his best, and has been called "the indifferent work of a genlus, not the constant labor of talent." Story's bronze statue of Edward Everett, next in the order of time, is pretty well known to visitors to Boston, as it stands known to visitors to Boston, as it stands on the Beacon street side of the public garden. This was paid for by popular subscription, and so rapidly did the money come in that a surplus of $10,000 was given to the Governor Atdrew statue fund, $5,000 to the Washington statue, and a portrait of Everett was paid for with the balance and placed in Fanenil hall. This, too, was the object of Philips's ridicule: "Everett in trousers too large for him, and a frock coat which he has slightly outgrown."

are less criticised. The former by J. Q. A. Ward, was the gift of Thomas Lee, who gave the Hamilton statue, and the latter was paid for by popular subscription and the proceeds of a great fair. The Washington statue in bronze is really imposing, with its figure of Washington twelve feet high, and its total height of thirty-eight feet. Thomas Ball was the sculptor, and many critics consider this the finest equestrian statue in the country. Martin Millmore was the sculptor of the next two monuments—the bronze statue of John Glover (a revolutionary soldier), presented by B. T. Reed, and placed in Commonwealth avenue, and the soldiers' monument on the common. The former has few faults, the latter has been severely criticised.

The so-called "soldiers' monument" is a clased.

The so-called "soldiers' monument" is a Doric granite column seventy feet tall, with four heroic bronze figures. The details have been called better than the ensemble, but from its situation on a little hill, partbut from its situation on a little hill, part-ly surrounded by trees, it is certainly, very effective. The cost, $75,000, was paid by the city. Between the pedastals supporting the four bronze figures representing the sailor, the soldier, history and peace, are some interesting bas-reliefs, with portraits taken from real life, and on the capstone stands a female figure, the "Genius of America."

America."

The Charles Sumner statue and the emancipation group are both by Thomas Ball, and both were erected in 1879. The former was paid for by a popular subscription of $15,000 and the latter was the gift of Moses Kimball. The Sumner statue is in the Boylston street mall of the public garden, near the Providence station. Wendell Phillips was especially severe to it. "If this bronze pyramid in Boylston street be a cask made of statues, why set it on human legs? * * * Is his broadcloth new felt, too stiff for folds, or is he dressed in shoe legs? * * * * * Is his broadcloth new feit, too stiff for folds, or is he dressed in shoe leather? "This heavy-modded prize fighter." "This heavy-modded prize fighter." "the Irish porter in his Sunday clothes." are other strong expressions which he uses.

The emancipation group, also near the Providence station, in Park square, is considered rather flat and lifeless, and the Quincy statue, by the same sculptor, has a rather awkward pose. The statue of Samuel Adams, by Miss Annie Whitney, is apt to be overlooked by visitors to Boston, since it is practically in the middle of the street, at Adams' square, and almost every one, when in that neighborhood, is chiefly engaged in efforts to get out of the way of passing cars or wagons. This, like the statues of Quincy and Winthrop, was paid for by the income of a fund left to the city by Jonathan Phillips.

The Winthrop statue, though in a center of the city of the city of the city of the content of the city by Jonathan Phillips.

way of passing cars or wagons. This, like the statues of Quincy and Winthrop, was paid for by the income of a fund left to the city by Jonathan Phillips.

The Winthrop statue, though in a central place, Scollay square, is apt to be overlooked, since it is surrounded by a maze of car tracks.

The statue of William Lloyd Garrison in Commonwealth avenue, near the Vendome, is very well known. It was erected in 1886 from funds raised by popular subscription. Olin L. Warner, the sculptor, has been highly praised, and his seated figure of the great abolitionist leaves little to criticise.

Miss Whitney's Leif Erickson at the entrance of the parkway is the figure of an ideal youth standing at the prow of his boat. Ole Bull started the fund to the Scandinavian explorer, and after his death it was continued by Mrs. Bull and Thomas G. Appleton. The statue of Milwaukee is a duplicate of this.

There may be some difference of opinion as to the merits of most of the statues described above. But there can be no disputing the bad taste in two or three of those of recent years. There, for example is the curlous little statue to General Cass in the public garden. It was erected in a very proper spirit by Irish citizens, who wished to commemorate the bravery of an officer of Irish birth. With rather limited means they were not able to get a really fine work of art. It had been better if they had aimed at a simple shaft. The artist who made this statue stated after it had been set in position that he supposed that he was making something for a cemetery. It is supposed that the Boston city government will rectify the mistake it made in placing this statue in the public gardens by a liberal appropriation for a real work of art to take the place of this one. A statue of Columbus which Italian citizens tried to get the city to accept two or three years ago was fortunately rejected. If accepted it would have been given a position out of proportion to its merits. As it is, it has an appropriate setting in the neighborhood of the Roman C

CHINA'S IMPERIAL HISTORY. It Is Being Translated Into English by a California Minister.

From The San Francisco Call.

Thirteen years ago Rev. John Gardner, of this city, conceived the large design of writing an English transcription of the enormous bulk of the imperial or official history of the Chinese people. He was not then a clergyman, and not much more than a boy. Since then, without relaxathan a boy. Since then, without relaxa-tion of the energy which prompted him to undertake this herculean task, he has as-siduously labored and—he is about half through with his task.

This is the first account published of what will at first glance appear to be an

through with his task.
This is the first account published of what will at first glance appear to be an astonishing enterprise for any one person to make his own. When the collateral enterprises are considered, which Gardner has accomplished by the way, these growing out of the pursuit of his original design, public wonderment is certain, for the official history of China dates back to a period between 2,000 and 4,000 years before the birth of Christ. It has been continued onward to the present time. So Mr. Gardner has essayed to reproduce chronicles written in the Chinese language in their entirety, covering a period of approximately 6,000 years in detail.

The imperial history of China has never been translated. Historians and political economists of all nations, considering the marvel of the continuance of China as an entity century after century during the time when Rome and Greece and other nations ripened and decayed, have never had more than a very small part of the history of that great portion of the world in their possession. The great official work consists of thirty volumes, the whole ag-gregating at least 10,000 pages, closely strewn with Chinese characters, from 450 to 500 to the page. At the outset, therefore, Mr. Garoner raced the certainty that he would have at least 1,000,000 characters to translate. As three Chinese character need, on the average, five words to give them expression in the English language, need, on the average, five words to give them expression in the English language, the number of words which will be in the history when it is completed in English will be nearer 2,000,000 words than 1,000,000. Ultr. Gardner is doing the work practically unaded. Like all men who undertake such exploits, or nearly all, he is poor, depending sometimes on a small salary as a Chimese missionary for his subsistence and that of his family. Before he can complete the distory, if he makes no more rapid progress than he has been enabled to record up to the present time, at least ten years more will pass. That is, he will have tolled hearly or fully a quarter of a century to place in the hands of succeeding historians every fact known to the Chinese about themselves, and also the gigantic myths with which a highly imaginative nation peopled their world and accounted for the existence of the earth and the remainder of the universe.

Rev. Mr. Gardner seemed to think that there was very little to be surprised at in these amazing incidental labors. He spoke very simply and modestly of the whole work. Eneugh curlosity must have been excited.

"My purpose in the main." he said. "Is to put into English an exact reflex of the history of 350,000,000 people from the standard history of the great empire. The measure adopted by the ancient founders of Chinese laws and customs and schemes of Soverent may have assessed. government may have ressons for and present if they can be ascertained. In the government may have tessors for an present if they can be ascertained. In the main I am translating the Chinese imperial history, dut am finaing sidelights in many other Chinese manuscripts. The ancient history of the Chinese people extends back to between 3,000 and 4,000 years before Christ. Prior to that is a period of Chinese mythology. The antiquity of the Chinese may be imagined from the fact that Confucius, 550 B. C., studied Chinese poets, who were then considered very ancient. "The earth, so the Chinese mythology held, was chiseled out by Poon Koo, the architect of the universe, with a great chisel. That mythology does not pretend to account for the presence of mankind on the earth. I find that autbentic history does not begin with the Chinese much before 2,500 to 3,000 years B. C. The existence of coins, monuments, inscribed vases and contemporaneous books is sufficient corroboration for the events recorded from that time onward in the official history. China was a very old nation when the other great peoples were coming into national existence. "Chinese bistory falls naturally into peer great peoples were coming into national existence.

'Chinese bistory falls naturally into periods, and in that way I shall treat it. In the first place, there were the beginnings of the government. I could not say how many parallels are found, in that early day between the experiences of the Chinese and those of the early Jewish people. They are many and striking. The early Chinese had kings who ruled them by kindness, and who seemed to think that thrones were given them by the Supreme Being. The people at first believed in one God. They were monothelsts. If they afterwards learned idolatry it was from the outsiders, particularly from India.

'The medieval period shows the origin of literature and the visitation of Chinese to other countries and the Visits of literature and the visitation of Chinese to other countries and the visits received by them from foreigners. There is no question that the history is absolutely authentic for 4.500 years. Many centuries ago Chinese astronomers gave aminute and scientific account of the eclipse of the sun, which has been completely verified by the computations of American and European astronomers. The Chinese devised the civil service system centuries ago. "Think," said Mr. Gardner, "what a theater has been he"e for the play of human hopes, fears, passions and exploitations for

The Great Flood.

It is hard for those removed from the scene to appreciate the extent of the calamity in the valley of the Mississippi. The estimate up to date is that the flood will cut the cotton crop short to the extent of 2,000,000 bales, representing a money loss of something like $80 .-000,000 equal to the cost of a military campaign. That part of this loss will be made good by an increased price for the short crop will bring no benefit to the immediate sufferers, if, indeed, such increase would come at all. To this loss must be added that of household and farm property and live stock, all of which is personal to the sufferers, and which can be made good in no event.

The control of the Mississir Geo, as to prevent a recurrence of the decimal the duty. which devolves upon the nation and the responsibility which rests upon the states concerned. It would seem that some plan might be evolved by which both would work together, and thus lead to definite results in the future. As It is, it is hard to say whether the large appropriations made annually have been wisely used or whether their expenditure has been entirely free from jobbery.

Daniel W. Voorhees.

The announcement of the death of Daniel W. Voorhees calls out of the obscurity into which it has recently fallen name that was once used to conjure with-a name that represented all that was gallant, intrepid and zealous in the democratic party.

In the beginning of the year 1893 Danlel W. Voorhees was one of the most concuous figures in the democratic party. He was a senator from Indiana. He had the confidence and affection of the demo- the subject of the Mississippi river and crats of his own state. Such was his its floods, covering a period of fifty-three record that he had the respect and esteem of democrats all over the land. He sed great powers as an orator, carrving into the discussion of public ques tions both feeling and imagination. On all vital issues, he represented the interests of the people, and whenever he had lifted up his voice in the forum of the senate or on the hustings, he spoke for and in behalf of the people.

Thus it happened that in 1893, when Mr. Cleveland, having been recently inaugurated, called congress together in ordinary session, the most promient figure on the floor of the senate was Daniel W. Voorhees, representing the cople and the democratic party of Indiana, and standing for the national party as a leader at once experienced, capable and incorruptible.

It was natural, therefore, that the whole country should experience a shock of surprise, and that democrats should feel a pang of regret, when this man arose in his place in the senate and placed himself behind the bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act-a bill which In the corrupt purposes behind it, repre sented all that Mr. Voorhees had opposed for a lifetime, and which has brought the whole country to the verge of bank-

In the twinkling of an eye this man turned his back on his life-long political ord, lifted his voice against his party and his hand against the people, and proceeded to use the arts of his eldquence and his parliamentary ability to the detriment of his own party. He succeeded, but at what a cost to the reputation and public usefulness of Daniel W. Voorhees! If there is any heroism in mitting political suicide, he was a No man ever made a greater sacrifice in behalf of opinions which he did not hold and schemes which he detested.

The mystery of his behavior in that crisis of his party's history has never been revealed—probably never will be It is enough to say that it put a sharp and sudden end to his political usefulness, and undoubtedly had a good deal to do in hastening the progress of the disease which carried him off, for he was never the same man after that time. For April the river began to rise above its

Mr. Voorhees was a proud and sensitive man, and at the bottom of his nature we believe he was true to those principles that had been his life-long guides in politics. The false step that he took he no doubt bitterly repented. It lost him the friendship of his political associates of half a century.

To his credit be it said, his new alliance was so repugnant to his feelings, his aims and his purposes that he publicly repudiated it in less than a year after he had made his capital mistake This fact should be borne in mind by those who may be disposed to censure Mr. Voorhees. For our part, we care only to remember that he was a very great man in all respects until, by some mysterious means, he was induced to become and thousands of dollars may eventually the leader and mouthpiece of Clevelandism in the senate. It was a fatal mistake, and he reaped the bitter fruits of it. He repented, but it was then too late to undo the damage that had been done.

A man less honest and less sensitive Than Mr. Voorhees (and there are many such men now going unblushingly about the land) would have taken some pride in betraying the people and the party; but he was honorable enough to feel the full burden of his misstep, and it finally crushed him.

Upholding the Turk.

Now that an acute stage has been reached in the Cretan question, the need of a modern Peter the Hermit is felt to stir up the conscience of the Christian world.

That nations which contribute to keep missionaries of the cross in heathen lands should be found in league with the caliph is past comprehension. The lands of heathendom are wallowing in their original ignorance, contented at least, if not enlightened; but under the sultan's rule eastern Christianity lies gagged and bleeding, holding on to its aith with a heroism and a continuity worthy of the ancient martyrs, whilst their western brethren hold on to theirs as the favored religion of the realm. How passing strange it is that these Christians with whom faith is a matter of temporal as well as of spiritual ease should be the allies of the tyrant and the persecutor.

Governments have drifted from the people into mere debt-collecting agencies, so that the validity of a Turkish bond is of more value than the conscience of a Christian sufferer. But some day the people will be aroused, and the old spirit of humanity will tri-

The attitude of the United States government toward Cuba is something that cannot easily be reconciled. Notwithstanding the nature of the struggle in which the Cubans are engaged, fighting a despotic and brutal power, the friendly offices of this government have been more frequently extended toward Spain than toward the insurgents.

Why is such the case when the sympa thies of the American people are alnost entirely with Cuba? In line with this question is the following one addressed by a curious inquirer to The Boston Journal:

I have been puzzled to know why it is that there has been none of our naval vessels kept in Cuban waters throughout the war which has been going on there. We send them to China and Turkey and other places when there is any outbreak to ook out for American interests but unles ad a single war vessel near at hand to inforce protection to citizens of this country should such an exigency arise, and surely it is not an unlikely thing to expect under the circ

Are we actually afraid of Spain? There are thousands of loyal Americans who feel the same curiosity expressed in the foregoing letter and who would like to have a better explanation of this government's attitude toward Spain than any which has yet been given.

Former Mississippi Floods.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has gathered up a variety of information on years. From this instructive budget it is learned that one of the most disastrous inundations of the century occurred in 1844, at which time many lives were lost, together with the wiping out of extensive property interests.

In 1849 the Mississippi and its tributaries from a point as far north as Alton, O., swept over their banks, producing wide-spread disaster. The loss of property in St. Louis and its vicinity aggregated $5,000,000, while at New Orleans it reached as high as $20,000,000. The Crescent City never sustained a more frightful visitation than the one of this year.

In 1857 the river at St. Louis climbed to a height of thirty-six feet and nine inches, which makes the overflow of that year rank second to the one of 1844, at which time the river registered fortyfour feet and nine inches. In 1881 a wide area of country was devastated by the floods, including portions of Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas. The valleys of the Mississippi and Ohio also suffered great injury at the same time. In the following year still greater loss was entailed upon the occupants of the Mississippi valley. Indeed, in some localities the loss produced by the floods was more disatrous than ever before known, and several governors found it necessary to appeal to the country at large for means of relief. The spring rise of the Mississippi in 1888 carried the river to a very high point, and occasioned much damage. In Illinois the loss of that year was greater, perhaps,

Seven years ago this spring the Mississippi and its tributaries overflowed several thousand square miles of land. Scores of settlements were swept away, and thousands of people reduced to want and suffering. Louisiana was perhaps the greatest sufferer of all the states by the flood of that year. In order to repair some of the injury wrought, congress appropriated the sum of $150,000 to the relief of the Mississippi valley ufferers. Two years later, however, in 1892, occurred the most serious flood of the upper Mississippi valley for more than a third of a century. Early in danger point, although it was not until late in May that its highest mark was reached. St. Louis suffered greater loss than any other place along the river's course. The loss of life throughout the entire valley reached as high as 1,100, while the destruction of property aggregated $12,000,000

While other disasters have occurred in the Mississippi valley besides those above enumerated, they do not rank with them in severity and are, therefore, purposely omitted. As to this year's flood it will doubtless exceed the one of 1892 in the amount of property destroyed, if not in the number of lives lost. Much damage has already been occasioned, but the record is still incomplete, be added to the year's aggregate of loss.

Gold at a Premium. One result of the financial changes that are booked to take place in Japan, or that have already taken place, is to send gold to a premium in the London market. The English mint price for gold is 77 shillings, 101-2 pence the ounce. Last week, the dispatches reported gold in strong demand in London at 77 shillings, 111-2 pence the ounce, "with practically no supplies." The demand comes from both Japan and Russia. Japan is converting her war indemnity credits in London into gold, while Russia is increasing her gold reserve. This combined demand has, therefore, sent the market price of gold shove the mint price in London.

The Springfield Republican, comment ing on this situation, describes as "silly and thoughtless" those newspapers that herald the new departure in Japan as something advantageous to this country, and says it can be of no help to us with the present monetary problem on hand o have the demand for gold heightened. Then our contemporary (which frequently makes but a narrow escape rom perceiving the truth) adds:

To herald the Japanese departure as something advantageous to this country, as many papers in the United States have done, is silly and thoughtless beyond de-scription. It can be of no help to us, with the present monetary problem on hand, to have the demand for gold heightened—to have one more nation enter the market. This increased demand for the standard of value metal not ony makes the position of our own reserves less comfortable, but tends to depress prices all around and in rease the stagnation in trade. We may yet have to supply some of this gold wanted in the far east. Then the Japanes movement will not look so attractive.

The movement in Japan has been so carefully balanced that its evil effects are not likely to be felt in that country at once, but in the course of a very ew months, reports will come that there has been a cessation in industrial progress; that "business has been overdone;" that "once again the world is brought face to face with the fact 'booms' are not healthful." That is the way the so-called economists deal with the effects of a money famine, or, what is the same thing, the increasing purchasing power of the unit of value. Japan, at the command of English financiers, has committed commercial suicide but the death will be a slow one, longdrawn out like a cat's.

But, for the time being, this country will be hurt worse than Japan. Every increase in the value of gold occasioned by this new demand for it will send down the prices of our products, and so decrease even the small volume of business that we now have. Ultimately, the whole foreign demand for gold will fall on our treasury as it did from 1893 to 1896. The discount rate of the Bank in the face of the 3 per cent premium on gold in London. This means, either that business in Great Britain has relapsed into a lethargic condition, or that preparations are going on to draw gold from the United States treasury

The recent tumbles in wheat and other food products are significant of what the country will have to face during the summer-lower prices and decreased purchasing power of the farmers and those dependent on them.

Live Stock Diseases There is now pending before the legisature of Pennsylvania a measure which is likely to arouse national interest in the subject of live stock. The measure provides for a thorough nvestigation of all diseases incident to ive stock, and also for the adoption of uch precautionary measures as are calculated to prevent these diseases. In support of the measure now pending, it estimated that diseases which could be easily be warded off by proper santtary regulations, yearly produce losses aggregating $6,000,000. During the past year, it is claimed, nearly one thousand head of cattle have been killed by order of the various state authorities, while the sum of $21,711 has been paid out in damages to the owners of these conlemned animals. Pennsylvania is provided with what is known in that state as the live stock sanitary board, composed of the governor, secretary of agriculture, dairy and food commissioner and state veterinary surgeon; and if the measure is adopte by the legislature, this board, in all likelihood, will be called upon to act as committee of investigation. The matter is one of very serious im portance, and other states should follow Pennsylvania's lead in giving it consideration. Diseases among live stock not only occasion property losses, but in many cases result in fatal injury to the health of individuals. Especially is there great danger in diseased cattle, milk cows in particular. Too much precaution cannot be taken in a matter of such grave importance, and the attention of our sanitary boards throughout this section is urgently directed to the measure now pending before the legislature of Pennsylvania.

Our naval intelligence bureau at Washington, says The Baltimore Sun, indicates the extreme expensiveness of a first-class navy. The amount of money England will spend this year in supporting and adding to her naval establishment is stated to be over $115,000,000. In the next few months work will be begun on four first-class bat leships, each of 14,800 tons, three cruisers two sloops, four gunboats and two torpedo boat destroyers. During the year 108 vessels will be under construction, including fourteen first-class battleships, eight firstclass cruisers, nine second-class cruise on third-class cruisers two sloops of war. four gunboats and fifty-two torpedo boat destroyers, aggregating a tonnage of 300,000 tons. Sixty-six of these vessels will be completed during the present financial year. All the fleets kept in foreign w re being strengthened by substituting new vessels for old ones of inferior size. The new ships call for more men, and ear there will be over 100,000 men in the British naval service.

A leading exchange observes that in 1850 an income of $2,000 meant as good housing food and clothing as $5,000 in 1897, when with the exception of rents, the necessities of life are no dearer than at the earlied date. Satan has invented for us so many artificial wants that in making out the family budget, instead of appropriating 75 per cent of income for necessities and 28 er cent for contingent expenses, we have to transpose the percentages, grateful that there is anything left to pay the butcher. If civilization implies the ability to satisfy desires, it appears also to mean the creation of wants ad infinitum. There does not seem to be a general impression that people are happier or more virtuous than in simpler times. We doubt if they are; but we believe that there are greater opportunities for happiness and far less inevitable misery than of old. It would be quite worth while to discover what really makes for happiness, and what we had better do without than have. It is only because Satan has introduced confusion to our ideas of values that it is so hard to understand exactly what is meant by prog-ress, and so difficult to deny the gift of necy to the Hebrew seer who foretold the destiny of man.

Wanted To Be Called a Gentleman.

From The Detroit Free Press. There was a sleight-of-hand performance in the opera house that night, and way down on one of the front seats there sat a man holding a shiny silk hat ostentatiously before him with an expression of deep anxiety and watchfulness upon his face. Before the performance began a friend who sat immediately behind him and had him what the trouble was. "Well, you see, Tom," said the man with the hat, confidentially, "it's this way. I've been in politics now for ten years, and I've been cussed and abused and called all sorts of hard names until I'm just longing to hear somebody address me in a decent manner one more time. When this magician comes on the stage he's going to

EDITORIAL DIGEST.

Some criticism has been directed toward the article published in this column a few days ago which, while commenting upon the appointment of Colonel Buck as minister to Japan, asserted that the cheap la bor of that country was today the most serious menace to American industry American enterprise and capital, as well as American labor, has to contend with. It was declared in connection with this criticism that the facts as stated were omewhat exaggerated and that labor in Japan was not so cheap as had been represented. If the original article was printing it is worth backing up, and here are the incontrovertible facts which do the acking.

Japan, as a nation, is so large that it is not possible to review her entire export and import trade, but a better comparison with our own country may be made by omparison of one of her many manufacturing cities with any one of ours. Kyoto, the ancient capital of Japan, is today perhaps the best evidence of the industrial progress of that country. The fact that it recently celebrated its eleven-thousandth anniversary is a suggestion of its age and mportance, while its beauty as a city has been described so often and at such length that it need not be enlarged on here.

Only a few years ago a vast majority Kyoto's 300,000 inhabitants lived a life of pleasure, while the minority drudged. More than half its area was given over to palaces, pleasure grounds, temples of all sorts, tea houses and other dwellings and resorts of the idle or the vicious. Today its former ramshackle bamboo cottages have been torn down to make way for substantial factories; electric cars have taken the place of the finrickishas in its streets; telegraph and telephone wires con-nect it with the outside world; chimneys of brick and iron succeed the minarets; red brick schoolhouses have been built and the rattle of the workshop and the rush of traffic down the plaintive singing of the geisha giris.

And Kyoto makes most everything. The following carefully prepared statement gives some idea of the variety and extent of Kyoto industries. The sliver dollar is used and the figures are for 189

Now, as to wages. Figures obtained didaily wages of potters ranged from 8 to 85 cents; of lacquer artisans, the same; of from 10 to 16 cents per day: of tailors in Tokyo and Kyoto, from 11 to 25 cents per day; of carpenters, from 24 to 30 cents per day in five of the principal cities, including Tokyo. The Osaka bricklayer receives only a trifle more. Stonemasons average 30 cents per day in both places. The wages range in ten cities between 12 and 25 cents. Shoemakers in eight large cities average 12½ to 25 cents per day. The range of carriage-makers' wages in five important towns in Japan is from 8 cents to 30, though the latter figure is very high, the average would be nearer 20 cents per day for skilled carriage-makers. Pape are, indeed, poorly paid, from 8 to 11 cents per day.

What would the American Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers think of 15 to 25 cents per day as a wage schedule for foundry iron men? Yet this is their average pay in Tokyo and Osaka, the two great industrial centers of Japan. It is useless to go farther into detail, because in all industrials in Japan vary but little. From 25 sen to 50 sen per day is about the range. That is, from 13 to 26

American money per day.

It is the Japanese method of living that makes this tremendous difference possible, and Mr. Perter tells a story of his pil-grimage through that country in search of industrial facts that may wake up those Americans who are not yet fully alive to their danger. He writes that while he was sitting on one of the verandas of the Yaam hotel one evening, contemplating the an-clent city stretched forth in the valley below, a Japanese gentleman said, rather

SKELETON FOUND IN DARK SWAMP

Mysterious Discovery Near West They wish matters settled only a few were present End Yesterday.

WAS THE MAN MURDERED?

Detectives Offer a Peculiar Theory to the Strange Case.

RELIEVE WILL MYERS HAD A HAND

Scene Is Near the Place Where Crowley Was Killed and the Officers Say the Bones May Be Tohse of the Famous "Brown Allen."

The people who live in the vicinity of the Sandtown 1612, 110ar the vicinity of West End, are worked up over the disovery of the skeleton of a man.

The skeleton was found early yesterday norning by a young son of Policeman Howell, and as soon as the report became general great crowds flocked to the place where it is supposed some horrible murder was committed. The matter was brough to the attention of Captain Thompson, of the police force, and he at once sent an officer to the place to investigate the case. It was found to be the skeleton of full-grown man, and some portions of the body are not fully decomposed. It is located in a swamp some distance from the road, and on account of the density of the cane growth, it is an admirable spot for murder. There are several things which indicate that the man was murdered, and that the victim was a white man of means. On the ground near the skeleton was a sece of a gold chain, a very small silver ring and a dainty little gold locket, which t is supposed was in the man's pocket, and ot discovered by the party who committed f robbery. round has become worked up to a wild state of curiosity over the discovery, and all manner of predictions are being made. The greatest excitement prevails, and the general belief now is that the skeleton found in the canebrake, near the Sand-town road, is the last remains of the man who acted as the accomplice of Will Myers in the murder of Forrest Crowley. Myers's grandmother lives not far from the place, and the murder of Forrest Crowley was committed but a short distance which played such a prominent part in the trial of the famous murderer, is matched to the most exact shade in the mire of the anebrake. It is said that in coming back to town from where the Crowley murder as committed. It is most probable that Myers took a course near this canebrake, for he had been seen in that locality a number of times before the killing. One thing which gives a shade of truth to the that the skeleton is the famous "Brown Allen," is the fact hat beyond doubt Myers had an accomlice, and that whoever this party was, no race of him was ever obtained. Will Myers swore to his last day that he had an ecomplice, but never for a moment ofered any solution for his mysterious dishat after the murder of Forrest Crowley, his colleague was lead near this swamp and killed for his share of the spoils, and for the additional purpose of covering up the tracks or the man who had congived the whole plan of robbery. Chief Connolly states that Myers was ibsolutely certain, when he was captured n Cincinnati, that his tracks were covered, and that no one in the world knew of the deed. He stated this much himself to the officers, and his actions spoke volumes where his lips uttered syllables. Captain Thompson is busy working or the case, and has put the detectives on it to see if it is possible to ascertain the identity of the murdered man. The general belief in police circles is that the skeleton in the canebrake is that of the man who played the mysterious part in the famous Crowley murder.

night at 29 Orange street. The burglar entered the house from the front door and after exploring all the rooms on the first floor, sauntered back into the kitchen and proceeded to load up with a supply of provisions. He deliberately took all the hams and other articles that his palate craved, but not being satisfied with the raw material, he appropriated a load of stove wood with which to cook his food. He even went so far as to take all the cooking utensils in sight and practi-cally left nothing but an empty stove. It was a clean sweep of everything necessary for a season of good housekeeping and wherever the bold burgiar is he has an ample supply to keep the wolf away for several months. The entire layout was removed without disturbing any one in the house, and no intimation of the burglar's visit was had until hours after. A call was sent in and Officer Jolly made a search for the man who made such a clean sweep of things. He kept up his investigation and finally found tracks of the burglar where he had camped in a vacant house about a block away and had evidently cooked him a good square meal and de-parted for parts unknown. There were remnants of the stove wood and scattered bits of coffee, ham and other things which Orange, but outside of this there was absolutely no clew to the deed.

SOMETHING ABOUT MRS. NANSEN How the Arctic Explorer First Met His Future Wife.

Of Dr. Nansen's wife not much informa-tion has found its way into print. She seems to have a very imperfectly developed taste for publicity, but what is known of her is interesting and indicates that she her is interesting and indicates that she is an uncommon woman, both in talents and character. It is recorded by Dr. Nansen's biographers, Brogger and Rolfsen, that his first meeting with his future wife was in the woods about Frogner Seator, where one day observing the soles of two feet sticking up out of the snow, he approached them with natural curiosity, in time to see the head of Eva Sars emerge from a snow bank. Dr. Nansen was marfrom a snow bank. Dr. Nansen was mar ried in 1899 after his return from his suc-cessful expedition across Greenland. King Oscar of Sweden is one of her admirers, and especially likes her singing, which he has often heard, and since she has been in England the compliment has been paid her of asking her to sing before the queen. She is a stanch backer of her adventurous husband, whose departure on his perlious errand cost her anxieties and misgivings, as to which she said little at the time. Since her husband's return she has some times spoken in conversation of her fears, and has said that careful comparison of Dr. Nansen's diary with her record or remembrance of her own sensations bears her out in the belief that the times when she was the most concerned about him were the seasons of his greatest peril. That implies a telepathic communication forn of intense sympathy and solicitude, the possibility of which science seems no longer disposed to deny.

The second marriage between Mr. John P. Atkinson, the seventeen-year-old son of Governor W. Y. Atkinson, and Miss Ada Byrd, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. C. P. Byrd, of this city, was solemnized yesterday in Chattanooga. The marriage, the last one, was the outcome of the determination on the part of Governor Atkinson and Mr. Byrd to see that the marriage was properly performe by a minister, the young people having been united in marriage by a justice of the peace at the time of their elopement some two weeks ago.

The ceremony was performed at the residence of Mr. I. C. Mansfield by Rev. Henry McDonald, of this city. Only a few of the personal friends of the two young people and of the parents of the bride and groom were present.

Just before the ceremony was performed the bride donned the first long dress that she had ever owned in her life. It was very wa "Iful and appropriate and was made after the evopement and when it was definitely decided that the second marriage should occur.

Mr. and Mrs. John P. Atkinson are no in Nashville, having left for that city immediately after the ceremony had been performed. When they return to this city, which will be in the course of a few weeks they will reside at the governor's mansion and will be ready to receive their friends. The following special from Chattanooga tells the story of the marriage: "Chattanooga, Tenn., April 11.—(Special.) John P. Atkinson, the seventeen-year-old son of Governor W. Y. Henry McDonald, pastor of the Second Baptist church of Atlanta,

"There were present to witness the cere mony Governor Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Byrd, Judge Spencer Atkinson, of the Georgia supreme court; Judge J. S. Turner, principal keeper of the Georgia penitentiary; Captain Oscar J. Brown, United States army, acting adjutant general of the Georgia volunteers; Mr. Charles P. Northen, assistant clerk of the Georgia senate, and several invited guests. The bride wore her first long dress, which was very handsome, having been made since the recent elopement of the young people.

"The trouble in securing the necessary icense was overcome this morning, when Mr. Byrd notified the county court clerk that his daughter had his consent to her marriage, the law of Tennessee requiring the consent of both parents to the marriage of either party if they be under seventeen years or age. The youthful couple left on the afternoon train for Nashville, where they will spend their honey moon. The Council Meeting Will Settle the Question for Good and All--- May Ignore the Veto.

If the city council at its adjourned meeting Tuesday afternoon decides to allow the board of health to try Chief Veal, Dr. J. F. Alexander, president of the board, will ask to be relieved of duty on the board while it is trying the case. But it is not at all certain that counci will allow the board of health to try Mr. Veal, and just there a very interesting ooint arises. In adopting the resolution for the trial to take place before the general council the members of that body were almost unanimous and all seemed to be of the opinion that the best course for them to take under the circumstances would be to conduct the trial. The resolution went its way to Mayor Collier and he gave it a knock-out blow.

He vetoed the resolution and in doing so fully and clearly explained his position. The question that is now agitating the minds of those interested in the matter is whether council will abide by the veto of Mayor Collier and let the board of health try Chief Veal or whether they ignore the veto and proceed with the trial as was mapped out in the resolution.

Dr. J. F. Alexander, president of the board of health, was seen yesterday and poard of neath, was seen yesterday and asked about his position in the matter. "If I retain my present intention." said he, "I will not serve on the board should council decide to allow it to try Mr. Veal. I have expressed an open opinion to the effect that Mr. Veal is innocent, and for that reason don't think I am qualified to be one of the men to try him. I will ask for relief and appoint some member to take the chair in my place."

Dr. Alexander would not say what he thought of the case now that it has been investigated, stating that he did not desire to commit himself any further. If he has any other reason for not desiring to serve on the board than the one above given he did not make mention of it and will keep it to half. It seems that in deciding to try Mr. Veal the city council hat the board of health and in a certain way over soil of that body. The question now arises, will the board of health try Mr. Veal, after it has been accordant by council and the master overlooked by council and the master brought before them only after a veto by It has been said that it was thought that the board would resign if council did not let it try Mr. Veal, and if the board should

It is commonly believed that the sapphire blue in color. As a matter of fact, the phire occurs in various hues. In Ceylon, where the finest specimens of the gem are found, it ranges from the soft, velvety blue to the peacock blue, graduated in the latter to an almost faultless white. It also occurs in whites, greens and yellows, the latter shade being known as the oriental topes, and the green as the oriental emerald. The white sapphires are often found clouded or white sapphires are often found sperimens streaked with blue, so that many sperimens treaked with blue, so that many sperimens are cut which are white when looked a transversely, but having a bit of fine blue tint on the under point. Then there is the red sapphire, or Ceylon ruby. It is valued as highly as the finest Burmese rubies. Those most highly prized are of a rich

BELONGS TO THE CRACK ENGLISH TEAM Club from Parliament and One from Congress Will Enter an International Game.

Yesterday's foreign news contained a dispatch from London stating that a gam f chess would be conducted by cable between several members of the house of representatives and a like number from the British house of commons. In giving the names of those who will conduct the English end of the game the name of John Howard Parnell, brother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, and member of the house of commons from Meath, was mentioned. This occasioned some surprise at Atlanta, for Mr. Parnell lived here at one time, and while it was known that he had returned to his native land it was not known that he had suc-ceeded in obtaining a seat in parliament. Mr. Parnell lived near West Point for some years and was a member of the Atlanta Chess Club, a now defunct organ-ization, but that was in the days of its infancy, when it occupied rooms on White-hall street and was composed of the leading lights in the chess playing cirles of the city.

Mr. Parnell was a farmer then and conducted a fruit and vegetable farm near West Point. He would come to the city with his produce, and after these had been sold he would invariably make his way to the chess club, where he would sit for hours watching the games and noving the men himself.

He was not considered a good player and was easily defeated by those with whom he played. He has sat at games with Major R. J. Guinn, John B. Redwine, Professor Wurm, John Carey, I. E. Orchard and other members of the club, and he was easily defeated by almost all of them. For this reason those in the city who have played chess with Mr. Parnell be-lieve that the game between the law-makers of the two nations will be a rather tame affair.

Mr. Parnell had told the members of the club that he was a brother of Charles Stewart Parnell, the Irish leader in the house of commons, who was at that time making a world-wide reputation for himself by his vigorous methods in behalf of his people. When Charles Stewart Parnell was assasinated his brother announced that he would return to Ireland to take charge of his estate and since then, so far as is known, no word has been received from him in this city. He sold his farm and returned. From

He sold his farm and returned. From the reports it seems that he is now a member of the house of commons.

He was a quiet and reticent man and would only talk to those with whom he was well acquainted but notwithstanding this fact he made a number of friends during his stay in this city. Now that he is a member of parliapiant it is not likely that he will ever return to this country, but the members of the chess club will never forget the time when they beat him at that scientific game. him at that scientific game.

Frequent and interesting statements concerning our Boys' Clothing find their way into our advertising, because we are especially anxious to impress you with the fine and unusual features of that great and growing department. Our Boys' Clothing for this season is as elegant and faultless as brains, genius and capital can produce. The chief of our designing room is as much of an artist in the creation of exquisite styles for Boys as Pinturicchio was in the development of Florentine painting. It requires so much genius to produce popular and graceful effects in Clothes for the Boys as to express in tinted outline the quivering delicacy of nude Venuses. There is similar merit in the masters of both arts.

OWENS AND HIS MOUNTAIN CASTLE

Cherry Mount, North Carolina, Where a Character Holds Forth.

NOTED REVOLUTIONARY BATTLE

Here Strangers Are Invited Into the Mysteries of Cherry Bounce.

MORE THAN ONCE WAS HE A CONVICT

Rare Scenes Described in Which the Bully Comes to Grief at the Hands of a Mountaineer.

Cherry Mount, N. C., April 10.—(Special.)
This county of Cleveland was the scene of stirring events during the revolution.
At King's Mountain, twelve miles from Shelby, the forces of Campbell, Sevier, etc., swept the summit, after killing Colonel Furgerson, one of the brevest and most Furgerson, one of the bravest and most skillful officers in the English army. Furgerson vauntingly boasted that he held a position from which God Almighty could not dislodge him. But the intreplid mountaineers of North Carolina and Virginia showed him that with God and Dukard's rifles nothing was impossible.

This battle was the turning point of the war in the south, and Tarleton was so harrasses by the deadly fire of the gathered clans from this region on to Mecklenburg county that he called Charlotte a "hored hang their progenitors.

This county joins South Carolina and has on its northwestern border spurs of the Snake mountain range. The most noted of these is Cherry Mount. On its summit stands the castle of Amos Owens, a character celebrated in song and story. When the invisible empire held high carnival Amos was a high priest in its mysteries. When the betrayal began among the week-kneed brethren Amos had to tread the wine press. For his castigation of erring negroes and obnoxious white folks, he served a term in the Albany penitentiary. But nothing could curb his iron will. He came from the penitentiary a unrecon-structed rebel, with his hand against the powers that be and the heavy hand of the federal government against him. He is a man of no education and his progenitors have made whisky from the time the memory of man goeth not back to the contrary. In order to spite the "govern-ment" he became a daring dealer in contraband whisky, also a maker thereof. With a zeal worthy of a good cause he lefiantly operated his moonshine "still." bany, besides seeing many terms of imnment and paying many fines in this.

On these occasions Amos feels that he has not lived in vain. He dispenses smiles and bounce, and has fast and furious dancing in his dance hall, while the hungry guests eat, pelt each other with Irish potatoes and smash tableware over the heads of all who are not sufficiently respectful. While Amos has a wholesome tempt for the "gover'ment," he has at last appealed to the courts. As a result, some of the boys and girls of about three counties are under bond to appear at Rutherford court in April, 1897. By the time the racy developments are concluded. time the racy developments are concluded, it is likely the "scenery" of Cherry Mountain will hereafter afford no charms.

ARE BATTLESHIPS SAFE?

England Is Afraid of the Seaworthiness of Her Men-of-War.

from The Boston Journal.
'Of Great Britain's thirty odd battleships all but one are either in home waters or with the fleet which is regularly maintained in the placid Mediterranean. The Centurion, of 10,500 tons, is the flagship on the China station, but, like the Barfleur, she was especially constructed for distant service, given light draught so that she could pass through the Suez canal, and equipped with a battery of 10-inch and 4.7-inch riffes, instead of 12-inch and 6-inch usually carried by vessels of her class, while her armor was reduced to nine and twelve instead of een and eighteen inches.

Under the tremendous weight of her armament the great ship began rolling violently, going at one time full 45 degrees, first to star-board and then to port. Her captain de-clared that 5 degrees more mould carry, her completely over. The coal ran low, but for a long time the officers in charge did not dare to change the vessel's course not dare to enange the vessel's course fear that she would capsize and foun-. When at last an abatement of the e enabled the ship to crawl back to eenstown her upper works were a and her crew exhausted by labor

The Resolution's narrow escape produced a profound impression upon flaval authorities everywhere. This is one reason why they have been so loath to send large armor-clads on long voyages in the stormy season. But with our great length of gale-swept coasts it is absolutely necessary that our fighting ships should be able to take the sea and keep it in all weathers. The navy department was amply justified, therefore, in ordering the indiana and Massachusetts to join Admiral Bunce, though it was a time of year when no other nation dreams of off-shore maneuvering. Just Before Lee's Surrender? From The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The bugler who blew the last "charge" of he civil war lives in Missouri. interestingly of that final rush at Appo mattox and the truce that speedily followed. His hardened lips sounded the inspired ing cavalry command that practically end-ed the bloody conflicts of four years, and sulted in ultimate peace and the perpetu ity of the union.

When the war broke out Nathaniel Sisson enlisted in the Second West Virginia cavalry. He rode under the flag of that gallant regiment through many a perilous struggle, and the year 1885 found him under Custer's command, in that part of the field where hostilltles were formally ended. "We had been pursuing Lee's retreating army all day on the 8th of April, 1865," said Mr. Sisson. "On that day we had captured a train of cars bearing supplies for Lee, and sent out from Richmend. We also made quick work of a belated wagon train, and, tired after so vigorous a day of foraging, we went into camp.

"After lying on our arms all night we were called early, and before daylight were in the saddle, ready for the events of the most glorious day of the war. The troubl began at an early hour. We advanced and net the enemy's skirmish line brushing them before us easily. In a short tim we were advancing, apparently, on Lee's wagon train, but, instead, we soon found curselves headed through Lee's army. Then the last bugle command of a hostile nature was blown, and we were charging at them.

"As we rushed on, two of General Gor don's aides rode out. They carried a flag of truce. That practically ended the war." This historic flag of truce, mentioned by Mr. Sisson, was the dirty towel so humorously referred to by General Gordon in his lecture on "The Last Days of the Con-federacy." The towel, though soiled as badly as the drying apparatus in a coun-try printing office, was so much cleaner than any of the apparel worn by the narch-stained men that it seemed whit parison. The display of so dirty a rag was the signal of trivapa for the north, and a sliept Secaration that the country was reunited.

"A federal officer rode out to meet the truce bearers," continued Mr. Sisson.
"Meanwhile Custer rode at the head of his charging column, entirely ignorant of the proffered truce. The aides spurred the proffered truce. The aldes spurred their horses and overtook Custer, who ordered the column to halt. The moving line stopped and the dashing Custer rode back to General Gordon's headquarters. "While terms of surrender were being discussed a squad of confederate cavalry dashed into the front of the union ranks Gordon hastened to send them command to cease hostilities, but found himself without an aide. He dispatched a willing federal soldier, who bore Gordon's order to end the attack. This was the gallant southern general's last official direction of the war, and it was executed by a soldier from the opposing !anks.

"Custer came back from Gordon's tent alone. As he passed we heard him tell General Kapehart, uncovering his head the while, that General Lee was treeting for capitulation. Those of us who heard it set up a cheer. It was carried down the line and across the valleys until the very hills shook with shouts of joy from the throats of thousands of the boys in blue, who realized that the war was over."

Bugler Sisson does not claim that he blew the last order of the war, but his regimental historian gives him the credit for it, and facts bear out the statement. The bugler who sounded the final charge before Lee's surrender is a well-to-do citizen, and was formerly a partner of ex-Governor Morehouse in the real estate and loan business.

An Interesting Sermon at West End Christian Church.

ON UNIVERSITY CONTROVERSY

Dr. Seddon Takes a Biblical Parallel To Show That the Course Should Be Sustained.

In his sermon at the West End Christian church yesterday morning, Dr. Seddon referred to the controversy raised about the Bible chair work at the State university. The text was Mark ix, 38-41. "John answered him, saying: Master, we saw one casting out devils in Thy name, and he followed not with us, and we forbade him ecause he followeth not with us."

The preacher said: "We here see a blemh in a character of much beauty. John as loving, but he was impetuous, and ould be intolerant. Intolerance was often loyalty of love carried beyond righteous ds. John may have meant well, but as indeed guilty of a very serious sin. Evangelist Luke says that Herod's crowning sin was the silencing of John Baptist's voice by shutting him up in prison. To silence a voice that testifies for Christ is a great sin. This is precisely what John preceded to do when he laid. posed to do when he laid John pro eto upon this man who was casting evils in the name of Christ. nodern parallel was furnished by the us epposition that had arisen against le chair work at Athens. A brother had recently been lecturing to the its at the State university, taking tutor night take Horace and Cicero, or the prefersor of Greek might take Homer. The lectures had been quite non-sectarian, the expenses had been borne by individuals, attendance had tendance had not been compulsory and cit-izens were invited and did join with the studence in listening to the lectures which were greatly appreciated by those whose privilege it was to hear them. "It seems difficult to understand how any

Christian could object to such a work, and yet sectarian zeal has burst out in violent opposition and denunciation. It is sad, in a world where there is so much sin and suf-fering resulting from sin, that any oppo-sition should come from Christians against any work which has for its design the teaching of the Bible.

"Happily John and his fellow disciples ived to grow out of this intolerant spirit. They lived to learn and teach that every redeemed soul becomes a king and a priest unto God, and has a God-given right to work and speak for Christ and destroy the works of the devil in His name.

"It is possible that some portion of the blame of this unhappy incident belongs to the oney worker for keeping himself apart fr. m the others. There are some who claim to be secret disciples, who stand aloft from their brethren and thereby deprive others of the help their co-operation would bring and lose the strength that would come to them from the help and sympathy of others." The preacher made this the occas-ion for an earnest appeal to such as might be standing aloof to openly unite themselves with the people of God in church

The people who live in the vicinity of the Sandtown road, near the vicinity of West End, are worked up over the discovery of the skeleton of a man.

The skeleton was found early yesterday morning by a young son of Policeman Howell, and as soon as the report became general great crowds flocked to the place where it is supposed some horrible murder was committed. The matter was brought to the attention of Captain Thompson. of the police force, and he at once sent an officer to the place to investigate the case. It was found to be the skeleton of a full-grown man, and some portions of the body are not fully decomposed. It is located in a swamp some distance from the road, and on account of the density of the cane growth, it is an admirable spot for a murder. There are several things which indicate that the man was murdered, and that the victim was a white man of means. On the ground near the skeleton was a piece of a gold chain, a very small silver ring and a dainty little gold locket, which it is supposed was in the man's pocket, and not discovered by the party who committed the murder, if it was one for the purpose

The whole community for some distance around has become worked up to a wild state of curiosity over the discovery, and all manner of predictions are being made. The greatest excitement prevails, and the general belief now is that the skeleton found in the canebrake, near the Sandwho acted as the accomplice of Will Myers in the murder of Forrest Crowley. Myers's grandmother lives not far from the place, and the murder of Forrest Crowley was committed but a short distance away Even the mud on Myers's trousers which played such a prominent part in the to the most exact shade in the mire of the canebrake. It is said that in coming back to town from where the Crowley murder was committed, it is most probable that Myers took a course near this canebrake, for he had been seen in that locality a number of times before the killing. One thing which gives a shade of truth to the supposition that the skeleton is famous "Brown Allen," is the fact that beyond doubt Myers had an accomplice, and that whoever this party was, no trace of him was ever obtained. Will Myers swore to his last day that he had an accomplice, but never for a moment offered any solution for his mysterious disappearance and it is more than probable that after the murder of Forrest Crowley, this colleague was lead near this swamp and killed for his share of the spails, and for the additional purpose of covering up the tracks or the man who had conceived the whole plan of robbery.

Chief Connolly states that Myers was absolutely certain, when he was captured in Cincinnati, that his tracks were covered, and that no one in the world knew of the deed. He stated this much himself to the officers, and his actions spoke volumes where his lips uttered syllables. Captain Thompson is busy working or the case, and has put the detectives on it to see if it is possible to ascertain the identity of the murdered man. The general belief in police circles is that the skeleto in the canebrake is that of the man who played the mysterious part in the famous

NEGROES ROB LITTLE BOYS.

Robbery Took Place in the Woods Near

West End Yesterday Afternoon. While Sam Saloshin and June, Joe and Herbert Schiff, four little boys, the eldest of whom is about thirteen years of age, were in the woods near West End yester day afternoon, having gone there for the purpose of gathering flowers, they were robbed by two negroes, who drew knives in them, threatened their lives and the proceeded to go through their pockets, taking all of their belongings.

Sam Saloshin is the son of Mr. Louis Saloshin and the three other little boys are sons of Mr. Joe Schiff. Both are well known in the city and they will prosecute the negroes if they are caught. The robbery little boys were very badly frightened. The police are now looking for the two men and if they are caught it will go hard with them.

WILL TRY TO PUSH OUT RECEIVERS

Mutual Building and Loan.

The Directors Will Ask To Take Charge of Affairs,

WANT THE COURTS TO LET LOOSE

Reorganization Scheme Will Be Put in a Petition To Be Filed This Week-How It Will Work.

There is promise of a lively fight between the receivers of the Southern Mutual Building and Loan Association and the several members of the board of directors.

This will come up over the effort to get the affairs of the association out of the hands of the receivers and the courts and place them in the hands of the share holders for settlement.

The question has been under considera tion for some time and it is said will take definite shape this week, when a petiton will be drawn asking for the dismissal of the receivers.

It is the desire of the directors who have the reorganization scheme in view to have the receivers put off at once, to have the board of directors reorganized and to put the whole matter of final settlement in the hands of the share holders.

It will be claimed by those who are to push the reorganization that the association, with the exception of one or two items, is in a solvent condition. It will be argued that those who have applied for a withdrawal of stock should not be counted as creditors, and that the real creditors of the association are very few.

There will be no desire to wipe out the present board of directors. What those who are pushing the change have in view is to get rid of the receivers whom they believe with other court agents will in various ways leave little for the share

This movement has already taken tangible shape and will materialize in a day or

In the meantime the receivers are hard at work and their attorneys will fight the suggestion of reorganization.

The city has been over-run with burglars for several weeks and some of the most daring acts of lawlessness have been committed in the most populous corners of town, but the most unique case of the kind which has come before the police in a long while was one which occurred last night at 29 Orange street.

The burglar entered the house from the front door and after exploring all the rooms on the first floor, sauntered back into the kitchen and proceeded to load up with a supply of provisions. He deliberately took all the hams and other articles that his palate craved, but not being satisfied with the raw material, he appropriated a load of stove wood with which to cook his food. He even went so far as to take all the cooking utensils in sight and practi-cally left nothing but an empty stove. It was a clean sweep of everything necessary for a season of good housekeeping and wherever the bold burglar is he has an ample supply to keep the wolf away for several months. The entire layout was re moved without disturbing any one in the house, and no intimation of the burglar's visit was had until hours after. A call was sent in and Officer Jolly made a search or the man who made such a clean sweep of things. He kept up his investigation and finally found tracks of the burglar where he had camped in a vacant house about a block away and had evidently cooked him a good square meal and departed for parts unknown. There were remnants of the stove wood and scattere bits of coffee, ham and other things which had been taken from the kitchen at 29 Orange, but outside of this there was abso lutely no clew to the deed.

EMERSON BROOKS TONIGHT.

He Will Entertain an Audience at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium.

Mr. Fred Emerson Brooks will make his appearance at the Young Men's Chris-tian Association auditorium tonight in the last of the star course entertainments. This will be the second time Mr. Brooks has been heard here, and he needs no introduction in Atlants. duction in Atlanta.

He is recognized as a great poet and is a genius of rare ability. He is a humorist who entertains and pleases, and he is an inimitable reciter of his own poems. He will be at his best tonight, and those who go out to hear him will be given a rare treat. It is expected that he will be greeted by a large audience.

SOMETHING ABOUT MRS. NANSEN How the Arctic Explorer First Met His Future Wife.

His Future Wife.

Of Dr. Nansen's wife not much information has found its way into print. She seems to have a very imperfectly developed taste for publicity, but what is known of her is interesting and indicates that she is an uncommon woman, both in talents and character. It is recorded by Dr. Nansen's biographers. Brogger and Rolfsen, that his first meeting with his future wife was in the woods about Frogner Seator, where one day observing the soles of two feet sticking up out of the snow, he approached them with natural curiosity, in time to see the head of Eva Sars emerge from a show bank. Dr. Nausen was married in 1839 after his return from his successful expedition across Greenland. When he started in the Fram in 1832 his wife, left at home at Lysaker, near Christiana, with one child, turned for occupation to the development and use of her gifts as a singer, and with notable success.

King Oscar of Sweden is one of her admirers, and especially likes her singing, which he has often heard, and since she has been in England the compliment has been in England the compliment has been paid her of asking her to sing before the queen. She is a stanch backer of her adventurous husband, whose departure on his perflous errand cost her anxeties and misgivings, as to which she said little at the time. Since her husband's return she has some times spoken in conversation of misgivings, as to which she said little at the time. Since her husband's return she has some times spoken in conversation of her fears, and has said that careful comparison of Dr. Nansen's diary with her record or remembrance of her own sensations bears her out in the belief that the times when she was the most concerned about him were the seasons of his greatest peril. That implies a telepathic communication forn of intense sympathy and solicitude, the possibility of which science seems no longer disposed to deny.

WILL SPEND HONEYMOON IN NASHVILLE

The Bride Donned Her First Long Dress Yesterday Before Marrying Atkinson the Second Time.

The second marriage between Mr. John of Governor W. Y. Atkinson, and Miss Ada Byrd, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. C. P. Byrd, of this city, was solemnized yesterday in Chattanooga.

The marriage, the last one, was the outcome of the determination on the part of Governor Atkinson and Mr. Byrd to see that the marriage was properly performed by a minister, the young people having been united in marriage by a justice of the peace at the time of their elopement some wo weeks ago.

The ceremony was performed at the residence of Mr. I. C. Mansfield by Rev. Henry McDonald, of this city. Only a few of the personal friends of the two young people and of the parents of the bride and groom

Just before the geremony was performed the bride donned the first long dress that she had ever owned in her life. It was very beautiful and appropriate and was made after the elopement and when it was lefinitely decided that the second marriage should occur

Mr. and Mrs. John P. Atkinson are nov in Nashville, having left for that city imnediately after the ceremony had been performed. When they return to this city which will be in the course of a few weeks, they will reside at the governor's mansion and will be ready to receive their friends. The following special from Chattanooga tells the story of the marriage:

"Chattanooga, Tenn., April 11.—(Special.) John P. Atkinson, the seventeen-year-old son of Governor W. Y. Atkinson, of Georgia, was married today to Miss Ada Byrd, the sixteen-year-old daughter of C. P. Byrd, of Atlanta, at the residence of I. C. Mansfield, Rev. Henry McDonald, pastor of the Second Baptist church of Atlanta, officiating.

"There were present to witness the cere nony Governor Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Byrd, Judge Spencer Atkinson, of the Georgia supreme court; Judge J. S. Turner, principal keeper of the Georgia penitentiary; Captain Oscar J. Brown, United States army, acting adjutant general of the Georgia volunteers; Mr. Charles P. Northen, assistant clerk of the Georgia senate and several invited guests. The bride work her first long dress, which was very hand some, having been made since the recen elopement of the young people.

"The trouble in securing the necessary license was overcome this morning, when Mr. Byrd notified the county court clerk that his daughter had his consent to her marriage, the law of Tennessee requiring the consent of both parents to the marriage of either party if they be under seventeen years of age. The youthful couple left on the afternoon train for Nashville, where they will spend their honey-moon. Mr. Byrd is responsible for the statement that the hitherto published statement putting the age of his daughter at fourteen years is incorrect; he says that he is sixteen.

"The governor's party left this afternoon for Atlanta, but the governor remained to visit the convict mines near Chickamauga. tion correspondent. Speaking of his son's marriage he said: "'All is well that ends well.' Many people have married younger than they and have been happy and I expect they will be. We will do all in our power to assist them. We could do nothing else than let them marry, inasmuch as they said they intended to do so. They will reside at the mansion."

Mr. Byrd said when approached on the "We have done what we deemed best under the circumstances. We only objected on account of their extreme youthfulness. They Reach Nashville. Nashville, Tenn., April 11.—(Special.)— John P. Atkinson and bride, of Atlanta, ATLANTA T. P. A. TO LEAD Another Post Will Be Organized Which Gives Atlanta Three.

The Atlanta traveling men are determined to lead in all matters pertaining to the Prayelers' Protective Association, and since Atlanta is the largest city in the south they feel that it is incumbent upon them to make it the leading Travelers' Protective city in this country.

Next Saturday night at the Kimball house another post will be established in this city, making in all three live, up to date posts, the members of which are working hard to advance the interests of the Travelers' Protective Association.

The officers of the infant post will be elected Saturday night and delegates will be elected to attend the convention which meets here April 23d and 24th. When this post is organized and officered Attanta will be the only city in the United States having three posts.

BOUGHT SAVINGS STAMPS.

Mr. Livermore Has Bought All the Stamps of Fidelity Savings Bank. Mr. D. H. Livermore has bought up at full value all the savings stamps issued by the Fidelity Savings bank, of this city. The greater portion of these stamps were issued to children. Some time ago Mr. Livermore announced that he would pay face value for the stamps and as a consequence they are all now in his possession.

Willing To Bargain.

From The Washington Star.

He was from the country and evidently unused to rapid transit. As the car stopped he cautiously extended his foot to dismount, but so deliberate was he that the car started before he completed the effort. This happened several times, and with each disappointment the look of anxiety on his face deepened.

"What do you want?" he inquired as the conductor touched him on the shoulder.

"Your fare. I want 5 cents for letting you ride on this car."

"Hero's your nigkel," was the reply.

"And I don't say that it ain't dirt cheap. It's more excitin' than the merry-go-round at a fair. But ye're givin' too much for the money, mister. I paid 5 cents ter git on here, an' I done it willin'; but I don't mind sayin' that I'll give ye a dollar an' a quarter ter let me on."

Programme.

Preparations are now being made for the Memorial Day exercises and from the present outlook the celebration of the event will be on a grander scale than ever before, Mrs. W. D. Ellis is in charge of the Rev. W. W. Landrum, of the First Baptist church, will be the orator of the day. Dr. Landrum is recognized as one of the ablest and most finished speakers in the south and it is probable that hundreds will come to the city in order to have the opportunity of hearing his address.

Major W. F. Slaton, superintendent of the public schools, will be the marshal of the day and will have control of all of the military part of the parade. Under his orders the military companies will march to the cemetery to participate in the exer cises which will take place there.

Rev. Theron H. Rice, the popular young minister of the Central Presbyteria church, will be the chaplain of the day, and he will offer up a public prayer at the cemetery. Mrs. Ellis has called a meeting of the ladies who have charge of the decoration of the graves for tomorrow after-noon at 3 o'clock.

This meeting will be held in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association building and it is expected that a full at-tendance will be present. At this meeting all of the final preparations will be made and the ladies will then go to work in earnest for the success of the day. Mrs. Ellis has announced that she has delayed the meeting because she did not desire to give the ladies time to grow weary of their work. She desires all who wish to help to go to work as soon as pos-sible after the meeting and have the result of their labors follow fresh and naturally at the proper time. The military companies are making their final arrangements for the parade. Uni-forms are being brushed up, buckles and belts are being polished, the guns are lookng like new and the soldier boys themselves are taking more interest in the day than ever before. The parade will be an elegant one and will consist of all of the military companies in the Fifth regiment and the com panies which are unattached. The armories are being utilized nightly by the members and each man is trying to outdo the other in drill and appearance.

The old soldiers, those who shouldered guns in the sixties, will be present and will march to the graves of their comrades. The ranks are getting thinner each year and on each parade the hearts of the veterans are made sad by the thought of those who were present on the last Memorial Day, but who have since joined their comrades in the grave.

The veterans realize that their days are almost numbered, but nothwithstanding this fact, they march to the cemetery every year and they feel and know that they are honoring those who died for the cause of

STRUCK BY A CAR.

An Old Negro Woman Injured Last Night on Forsyth Street.

Charlotte Roberts, an old negro woman who lives at 136 Forsyth street, was hurt of Forsyth and Brotherton streets by a car of the Traction Company. The old woman works on Courtland street as a cook and last night after she had prepar ed supper started home.

It is thought that the car was coming so fast when she reached Brotherton street, on Forsyth, that she was unable to get out of the way, and the front end of the car struck her left shoulder. Her head was badly cut and was bleeding profusely at the time that the ambulance arrived. The old woman was thrown to the pavement by the blow, where she lay stunned and bleeding. Several people who were passing rushed to her assistance and she was taken to the sidewalk, where she lay in intense agony. She was finally put into the amublance and was taken to the hospital, where it was found that besides several bruises no harm had been done, except that her

TRY CHIEF YEAL?

DR. W. W. LANDRUM IS ORATOR | ALEXANDER WILL NOT SERVE | HE IS WELL KNOWN IN ATLANTA

Major W. F. Slaton Will Have Charge President of Board of Health Will Ask To eB Relieved.

DR. THERON RICE NAMED AS CHAPLAIN SAYS HE HAS EXPRESSED AN OPINION

The Council Meeting Will Settle the Question for Good and All---May Ignore the Veto.

If the city council at its adjourned meet ing Tuesday afternoon decides to allow the board of health to try Chief Veal, Dr. J. F. Alexander, president of the board, will ask to be relieved of duty on the board while it is trying the case.

But it is not at all certain that counci will allow the board of health to try Mr. Veal, and just there a very interesting In adopting the resolution for the trial to take place before the general council the members of that body were almost unanimous and all seemed to be of th opinion that the best course for them to take under the circumstances would be to conduct the trial.

The resolution went its way to Mayo Collier and he gave it a knock-out blow. He vetoed the resolution and in doing so fully and clearly explained his position. The question that is now agitating the minds of those interested in the matter is whether council will abide by the veto of Mayor Collier and let the board of health try Chief Veal or whether they will ignore the veto and proceed with the trial as was mapped out in the resolution. Dr. J. F. Alexander, president of the board of health, was seen yesterday and asked about his position in the matter. "If I retain my present intention," said he, "I expressed an open opinion to the effect that Mr. Veal is innocent, and for that reason don't think I am qualified to be one of the men to try him. I will ask for re-lief and appoint some member to take the chair in my place."

Dr. Alexander would not say what he thought of the case now that it has been investigated, stating that he did not desire to commit himself any further. If he has any other reason for not desiring to serve on the board than the one above given he did not make mention of it and will keep

It seems that in deciding to try Mr. Veal the city council hit the board of health and in a certain way over looked that body. The question now arises, will the board of health try Mr. Veal, after it has been overlooked by council and the matter brought before them only after a veto by It has been said that it was thought that the board would resign if council did not let it try Mr. Veal, and if the board should now refuse to try him after having been slighted things would be in a pretty mud-No member of the board of health has given it out that the board will not try. Mr. Veal if council allows it to so, but nevertheless there is a possibility that such action might be taken.

The meeting of the council next Tuesday will settle the matter and not until then will it be known just what municipal body or board will have the trial of Chief Veal

MR. W. J. COLLINS IS DEAD

THE WELL KNOWN CITIZEN PASS-ED AWAY YESTERDAY. He Had Been Ill for Several Months and His Death Was Not Unexpected. After a sickness of several months Mr

William J. Collins, one of the oldest and best known citizens of Atlanta, died yes terday morning at 6 o'clock at his residence, 160 West Peachtree street.

Mr. Collins had been lingering for sev eral weeks and while his death causes much sadness to his friends, it does not come as a surprise. Some days ago all hope of recovery was given up and desth had been expected. Mr. Collins was fifty-three years old at the time of his death and had spent the greater portion of his life in Atlanta. He was born in Cobb county near the line or Fulton and was the son of J. A. Collins, who was the first merchant to do usiness in this city. Several years ago Mr. Collins retired from active business life, but up to that time he was one of the leading business men of the city and entered many successful enterprises which resulted in the upbuilding of Atlanta. His wife, Mrs. W. J. Collins, and seven children-four boys and three girls-survive him. The children are: J. R. Collins

W. R. Collins, Loyd, Melvin, and Misses Mamie, Fannie and Winfred. The funeral will take place this mern ing at 10 o'clock from the Church of the Immaculate Conception and the interment will be at Oakland cemetery. The pallbearers are as follows: R. J Griffin, F. B. Law, Peter F. Clark, J. H Loyd, S. K. Foster and Dr. King. They are requested to meet at Swift's undertaking establishment this morning at 9 o'clock.

Sapphires Not All Blue.

From The Pittsburg Dispatch.
It is commonly believed that the sapphire is known only as a gem of a rich velvety blue in color. As a matter of fact, the sap-phire occurs in various hues. In Ceylon, where the finest specimens of the gem are found, it ranges from the soft, velvety blue to the peacock blue, graduated in the latter to an almost faultiess white. It also occurs in whites, greens and yellows, the latter shade being known as the oriental topss, and the green as the oriental emerald. The white sapphires are often found clouded or streaked with blue, so that many specimens are cut which are white when looked at transversely but beying a hit of fine blue. transversely, but having a bit of fine blue tint on the under point. Then there is the red apphire, or Ceylon ruby. It is valued as highly as the finest Burmese rubies. Those most highly prized are of a rich pigeon blood or rose red color.

Club from Parliament and One from Congress Will Enter an International Game.

Yesterday's foreign news contained dispatch from London stating that a game of chess would be conducted by cable between several members of the house of representatives and a like number from the British house of commons. In giving the names of those who will conduct the English end of the game the name of John Howard Parnell, brother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, and nember of the house of commons from Meath, was mentioned. This occasioned some surprise at Atlanta, for Mr. Parnel lived here at one time, and while it was known that he had returned to his native land it was not known that he had succeeded in obtaining a seat in parliament. Mr. Parnell lived near West Point for some years and was a member of the Atlanta Chess Club, a now defunct organization, but that was in the days of its infancy, when it occupied rooms on Whitehall street and was composed of the leading lights in the chess playing cirles of the city,

Mr. Parnell was a farmer then and conducted a fruit and vegetable farm near West Point. He would come to the city with his produce, and after these had been sold he would invariably make his way to the chess club, where he would sit for hours watching the games and sit for hours watching the games and moving the men himself.

He was not considered a good player and was easily defeated by those with whom he played. He has sat at games with Major R. J. Guinn, John B. Redwine, Professor Wurm, John Carey, I. E. Orchard and other members of the club, and he was easily defeated by almost all of them. For this reason those in the city who have played chess with Mr. Parnell believe that the game between the lawlieve that the game between the lawmakers of the two nations will be a rather tame affair.

Mr. Parnell had told the members of the club that he was a brother of Charles Stewart Parnell, the Irish leader in the house of commons, who was at that time making a world-wide reputation for him-self by his vigorous methods in behalf of his people. When Charles Stewart Parnell was assainated his brother appropried his people. When Charles Stewart Parnell was assasinated his brother announced that he would return to Ireland to take charge of his estate and since then, so far as is known, no word has been received from him in this city.

He sold his farm and returned. From the reports it seems that he is now a member of the house of commons.

He was a quiet and reticent man and would only talk to those with whom he was well acquainted, but notwithstanding this fact he made a number of friends durthis fact he made a number of friends du ing his stay in this city. Now that he is a member of parliament it is not likely that he will ever return to this country, but the members of the chess club will never forget the time when they beat him at that scientific game.

Colonel Revel is a citizen of Greenville and one of the old-timers. By the way, it is an inspiring sight to see him primping before a small mirror in his office along about 3 o'clock Saturday afternoons, just before leaving time, when he is getting ready to depart for Greenville to spend Sunday with Mrs. Revel, while Warren is fidgeting about in the next room waiting his turn at the looking glass.

Just Before Lee's Surrender? From The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The bugler who blew the last "charge" of the civil war lives in Missouri. He talks interestingly of that final rush at Appomattox and the truce that speedly follow-ed. His hardened lips sounded the inspir-ing cavalry command that practically end-ed the bloody conflicts of four years, and resulted in ultimate peace and the perpetu-

When the war broke out Nathaniel Sisson enlisted in the Second West Virginia cavalry. He rode under the flag of that gallant regiment through many a perllous struggle, and the year 1865 found him under Custer's command, in that part of the field where hostilities were formally ended. "We had been pursuing Lee's retreating army all day on the 8th of April, 1865," said Mr. Sisson. "On that day we had captured a train of cars bearing supplies for Lee, and sent out from Richmend. We also made quick work of a belated wagon train, and, tired after so vigorous a day of foraging, we went into camp.

"After lying on our arms all night we were called early, and before daylight were in the saddle, ready for the events of the most glorious day of the war. The trouble began at an early hour. We advanced and net the enemy's skirmish line, brushing them before us easily. In a short time we were advancing, apparently, on Lee's wagon train, but, instead, we soon found currelves headed through Lee's army. Then the last bugle command of a hostile

nature was blown, and we were charging at them. "As we rushed on, two of General Gordon's aides rode out. They carried a flag of truce. That practically ended the war." This historic flag of truce, mentioned by Mr. Sisson, was the dirty towel so humorously referred to by General Gordon in his lecture on "The Last Days of the Con-federacy." The towel, though soiled as badly as the drying apparatus in a country printing office, was so much cleaner than any of the apparel worn by the marchstained men that it seemed white in comparison. The display of so dirty a rag was the signal of triumph for the north, and a silent declaration that the country was reunited.

"A federal officer rode out to meet the truce bearers," continued Mr. Sisson.
"Meanwhile Custer rode at the head of tis charging column, entirely ignorant of the proffered truce. The aides spurred their horses and overtook Custer, who ordered the column to halt. The moving line stopped and the dashing Custer rode back to General Gordon's headquarters. "While terms of surrender were being discussed a squad of confederate cavalry dashed into the front of the union ranks. Gordon hastened to send them command to cease hostilities, but found himself without an aide. He dispatched a willing federal soldier, who bore Gordon's order to end the attack. This was the sallant to end the attack. This was the gallant southern general's last official direction of the war, and it was executed by a soldier from the opposing ranks.

"Custer came back from Gordon's tent alone. As he passed we heard him tell General Kapehart, uncovering his head the while, that General Lee was tretting for capitulation. Those of us who heard it set up a cheer. It was carried down the line and across the valleys until the very hills shook with shouts of joy from very hills shook with shouts of joy from the throats of thousands of the boys in blue, who realized that the war was over." Bugler Sisson does not claim that he blew the last order of the war, but his regimental historian gives him the credit for it, and facts bear out the statement. The bugler who sounded the final charge before Lee's surrender is a well-to-do citizen, and was formerly a partner of ex-governor Morehouse in the real estate and loan business.

An Interesting Sermon at West End Christian Church:

ON UNIVERSITY CONTROVERSY

Dr. Seddon Takes a Biblical Parallel To Show That the Course Should Be Sustained.

In his sermon at the West End Christian church yesterday morning, Dr. Seddon referred to the controversy raised about the Bible chair work at the State university. The text was Mark ix, 38-41. "John answered him, saying: Master, we saw one casting out devils in Thy name, and he followed not with us, and we forbade him because he followeth not with us."

The preacher said: "We here see a blemish in a character of much beauty. John was loving, but he was impetuous, and could be intolerant. Intolerance was often the loyalty of love carried beyond righteous bounds. John may have meant well, but he was indeed guilty of a very serious sin. The Evangelist Luke says that Herod's crowning sin was the silencing of John Baptist's voice by shutting him up in prison. To silence a voice that testifies for Christ is a great sin. This is precisely what John proposed to do when he laid his veto upon this man who was casting out doubt doubt he now of Christia.

out devils in the name of Christ.
"A modern parallel was furnished by the vigorous epposition that had arisen against the Bible (tair work at Athens. A brother beloved had recently been lecturing to the students at the State university, taking the Bible as a textbook, just as the Latin tutor might take Horace and Cicero, or the professor of Greek might take Homer. The lectures had been quite non-sectarian, the expenses had been borne by individuals, attendance had not been compulsory and cit-izens were invited and did join with the students in listening to the lectures which were greatly appreciated by those whose privilege it was to hear them.

"It seems difficult to understand how any Christian could object to such a work, and yet sectarian zeal has burst out in violent opposition and denunciation. It is sad, in a world where there is so much sin and suf-

Chief Executive and His Cabinet Lead a Nomadic Life and Are Most in the Saddle.

It is a favorite assertion of the enemies of Cuban independence that there exists among the insurgents, in Spain's war-ridden colony, no practical system of government. Such a view of the present state o the Cuban republic, is, as can be shown from personal observation by the writer, wholly untenable.

Salvador Cisneros is the president and chief executive of the Cuban republic, rightly so-called, It has fallen to the writer's lot to dwell in the tents of President Cisneros, and to study attentively the admirable system of rule by him established throughout his native island.

Although known as the marquis of Santa Lucia, Salvador Cisneros is, by temperament and tuition, a democrat. In spite of his being descended from a long line of Epanish nobility, he was born a democrat. see he first came to this country to study the great principles which underlie the foundation of this republic. To give Cuba a government like it is the ambition of his life. He is far from being, as some people in this country are inclined to be-Here, a president in name only-a mere figurehead. He is a president in fact, the executive head of the million and a quarter of people on the island, who are either farming or fighting for the success of the "army of liberation." As in the United States, the president is the commander-inchief of the forces on land and sea, and on his shoulders rests the actual responsibility for the conduct of the war and the establishment of a permanent and enduring republic. Although Cisneros is a man of pronounced character and marked independence, he is far from being a dictator. Between him and Generals Gomez and Garcia there is a degree of mutual dependence and co-operation which has made the revolution which have occurred in similar uprisings in many of the South and Central American countries. Of jealousies among the leaders there have been none. The cause of liberty is too sacred to permit it. Occasional differences of opinion and friendly clashes are unavoidable, but the one great end in view enforces harmony in all branches, civil and

The constitution of the republic of Cuba is constructed along the same lines as our own. The broad principles of democracy which inspired Thomas Jefferson are to be found all through its text. Salvador Cisneros saw that they were incorporated in it and has placed copies of the document in the hands of every "prefecto" and "sub prefecto," with instructions to read them to the free people of "Cuba libre." No sooner did the first notes of battle come down from the hills of the "Oriente" than this old veteran made preparations to go to the front. He had sacrificed everything, lands, wealth, position and title. on the altar of liberty, and when General pant of this humble shelter is little Garonihim. This patriotic old man of seventy years had mounted his horse and ridder out of the city of Puerto Principe, with fifteen companions, eager to devote the remainder of his life to the freedom of his

How Insurgent Cuba Is Administered. The people, through the assembly, convened in the following September, elected him president of the provisional govern ment, and in that capacity he has worked quietly and faithfully for nearly two years. The result of this labor may not be apparent to the outside world, but its benefits are most obvious to a traveler through the interior of Cuba.

The entire island has been divided, first into what are known as civil districts, with a civil governor over each. These civil districts are divided into "prefectos" and "sub-prefectos," the latter usually about three miles square, and officers known as "prefectos" and "sub-prefectos," appointed by the government, are in charge of their respective territories. Each has his official seal and functions carefully prescribed by the constitution. It is his duty to instantly notify the nearest body of insurgent troops of the approach and strength of any Spanish column and to furnish "practicos," or guides, whenever called upon. If an insurgent force camps in his district it is his duty to furnish, so far as possible, any food they may need.

To all complaints or requests for food, clothes or medicines, coming from families whose fathers or sons may be fighting for "Cuba libre," he must lend an ever-willing ear, and if it is impossible to satisfy the requirements of the case, it is his duty to inform his "prefecto," and he in turn relies upon the support of the civil governor. If this official is unable to cope with the difficulty he must appeal to the secretary of the interior and, lastly, to the president of the republic. The latter is easily approached at all times by the poorest peasant in the land, and is simply worshiped by the people at large. The carrying and distribution of mail matter by means of mounted messengers who traverse the interior is both efficient and rapid. President Cisneros told me that twenty-four hours after the passage of the concurrent resolution by our congress, last spring, the news was received by him at his headquarters in Najassa, province of Camaguey.

A Movable Seat of Government. Strange as it may seem, the "marques," the name by which he is most frequently called, becomes most restless if long compelled to remain in camp at any one place He loves to travel about, to visit the civil governors and prefectos of different districts; to talk with the people, or, better still, to accompany the forces of Gomez or Garcia and watch the military movements from day to day.

With an escort of only fifty men he has many times made the trip from Santa Clara Santiago de Cuba and back again. And t is this penchant for moving about and changing camp which has given rise to the absolutely groundless report that the provisional government was being driven by the Spanish forces from one part of the island to another, and was always in danger of capture.

During the month of July last there were laid before President Cisneros the advantages which, it was thought, would accrue should he see fit to establish a permanent headquarters or seat of government at some given place, Najassa, Cubitas or even in the mountains of the "Oriente."

Generals Garcia and Rabi supported these suggestions most heartly, but the marjuls, while he admitted that such a permanent location of the government could be easily defended and that a certain increase of dignity might follow, still did not take kindly to the idea. The provisional government had traveled about and shared the dangers of battle during the "ten-year war," and he saw no sufficient reason to change his tactics

"We are doing good work." he said. "You have seen the evidences of our administration on every hand, and you found no difficulty in reaching us nor will any one else. If the United States or any country will send an agent, officially or socially, to visit and inspect the administration and execution of our laws in 'Cuba libre' we will not only conduct him here, but we will entertain him so long as he cares to stop, and provide for his return in safety vhenever he may wish to depart."

There is a quiet and unconscious dig-nity about Salvador Cisneros's life in the woods, which seems almost pathetic. Seat-ed on a leather camp stool, or more frequently standing, he receives the constant stream of officers and messengers who come to bring reports from civil governor and commanders in different parts of the island. These are duly filed and copied by his two secretaries, Manolo and Diego Betancourt. Long after dark these industrious brothers may be seen recording in huge government ledgers the events of the day. Yellow, home-made wax candles, with the lower half celled into a base, furof a patriotic and desperate people are transmitted to the pages of Cuba's history. Nothing but a canvas shelter stretched over a ridge pole protects the president's white hairs from the sun and storms of the tropics. Front, back and sides of the tent are all open to the elements, but no one ever heard a complaint from within. A folding table surrounded by four camp stools occupies the center of this white house of the woods. Several chests, in which are kept the government records furnish additional seats when required. Iwo linen cloth hammocks swing upo either side of the tent.

One of them is occupied by the "marques," the other by Vice President Barto-lome Masso, a singular, quiet little man of remarkable learning and sagacity, whose self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause of Cuban liberty has won for him the esteem and gratitude of the whole island. Even the enemy respects and admires Masso for before taking the field against Spair he insisted on paying off a debt of $40,000 owed to Spanlards. The vice president, unlike Cisneros, does not speak English, although he understands it if spoken slow-Gomez crossed the frontier into Camaguey, to, the adopted son of the president, and the youngest soldier in the Cuban army. Youngest Soldier in the Cuban Army. Two years ago this spring, a bright-faced boy of twelve years rode up to the president's headquarters in Najassa. He had left his home in the city of Puerto Principe and sought the insurgent camp. "Senor Marques," he said, "the Spaniards have killed my father. There is no one of us left but me to fight for Cuba. But if I could have a gun I'd like to take my

And he got the gun, together with the leve and protection of Salvador Cisneros. A pile of sarones (large palmetto or grass saddle bass) answered as a bed for this in-fant soldier of the republic until a few months ago, when the president concluded to send him to New York to be educated The marquis is tall and stately in his bearing, but most democratic in his dress. A light suit of home-manufactured liner clothes his tall, spare form, which is very like our recollection of Abraham Lincoln's. A pure white "panama" protects his fine almost classical face from the sun. A neatly trimmed silver-white beard and mustache add a softening effect to his rather stern, weather-bronzed features. Privations of the President.

Salvador Cisneros is a soldier, every inch of him. At the siege of Zanga I saw him come out on to the field, rein up his horse alongside the rapid-fire hotchkiss and calmly watch the effect of the fire, while mause palls were cutting down men on all sides of him. Poor Osgood, the American who met death while serving the cannon, pro tested against this unnecessary exposure but the brave old man repileu: "We have many men with us who have never befor been under fire; they must be taught by example that a soldier should ignore the chance of death."

And yet this old warrior has all the tenderness of a woman. After listening one day to my description of the death of a mulatto lieutenant, who had led a charge on a convoy in the "Oriente," the tears stood in the marquis's eyes as he mur-mured: "Too bad, too bad! Were not liberty so precious a thing it would be dearly bought, even at the cost of that poor fellow's life. Every drop of blood spilled seems wrung out of my own heart."

Every hardship, privation and danger of the war has been shared by President Cisneros from the beginning. Such luxuries as bread and butter are absolutely unknown. A poor substitute for the form-er, called casabe, drifts into camp occasionally, but seldom lasts more than a day Coffee is worth almost its weight in silver and hard to get at any price. A drink called "canchanchara," made by slightly scorening honey over the camp fire and afafterwards adding boiling water, usually takes its place. If honey cannot be obtained brown sugar in cakes (called raspadura) answers very well. Fresh beef and green bananas ("platinas") are almost always on hand and in plenty. Sweet potatoes ("boncatas") are abundant in some parts of the island.

I remember that in Najassa, last summer, we lived for five days on beef and mangoes. The president reminded me one morning that I had not eaten at his table for geveral meals, and I was abliged to tell him that his table had become really too him that his table had become really too bad. That evening it was my privilege to send the "marquis" a young roast pig, ten pounds of honey and some fresh eggs.

The President's Cabinet. Surrounding the president's tent are those of his cabinet. 'Tis needless to say that they shelter men of culture and refinement. They were the choice of the assembly elected by the people of Cuba, and are all devoted to the common cause of Colonel Mandulay, acting secretary of war in General Roloff's absence, is a bright and most industrious officer of the government. Couriers are coming and going from his headquarters at all hours of the day, and often until far in the night. The and is very proud of his accomplishment, although his speaking vocabulary is confined to a few phrases. The favorite of these is "Poor Cuba!" and this is made to serve on all occasions, sublime or ridicu-lous. I remember one morning, just pre-vious to a review of the forces by the late General Serefin Sanchez, Colonel Mandu-lay, who is the personification of military tidiness, swung himself gracefully into the saddle. The manner of the mount would do credit to one of the queen's guards, but there came over his countenance a change, an anxious, distressed look, which portendhis long-enduring trousers had split from one end to the other. With rare forbearance he indulged simply in a long drawn sigh and his favorite exclamation, Cuba!" and immediately sought the tent-maker for a needle and twine.

One of the most important and imposing personages of the camp is Colonel Betan court, governor, quartermaster, sanitary inspector and "all round boss." He deals out the coffee (if there happens to be any) the raspadura and the manteca de vace (beef suet.) He sees that the beever into camp each day are killed and the meat fairly apportioned to each mess. Great bonfires are built over the refuse, the monent the meat 's taken from the bones, so that there is no opportunity for are rigidly enforced in all parts of the island, which accounts for the almost total absence of disease. Camp, whenever possible is made by some running stream and guards are at once posted to see that no bathing or washing of horses is indulged in above the spot where drinking water

Colonel Betancourt is a great gun camp, but when stakes are pulled up and nammocks pulled down, you will observe a shade of anxiety spreading over his naturally serene countenance. But a still deeper one comes over the face of the little mule which has to carry the colonel' 300 pounds of adipose tissue to the next stopping place. He at first appears inclined to rebel, but after reflection, a change comes over the spirit of his dream. His ears resume an angle of resignation, and in his eyes you easily read, "It's for Cuba, poor Cuba! I will bear my burden with the rest, but Colonel Betancourt is pretty

In going over the road this patient little beast usually picks out a rut in which to walk, so that often all six feet touch the ground at once.

There is a peculiar mingling of the picturesque and the pathetic in the nomadic life of the insurgent government. The cluster of white canopies reflecting back the soft pure light of a tropical moon; the long, graceful plumes of royal palms, gently fanning the tired patriots into slumber; the sweet little night song of the mocking-bird, all help to form a picture of joy and content, and were it not for the distar roar of musketry, which comes from the lines of a harassed Spanish column on the other side of the hills, one could easily im agine himself in a land of perpetual peace GEORGE RENO.

WHY TALL MEN ARE SHY. A Plausible Explanation Given by

French Physicians. Two French physicians who have been making investigations have come forward with a general denunciation of tall men as no good, says The New York Herald. They instance the giants of the world, who have been proverbially dull and men of glocmy disposition, and say that the chances are against phenomenally tall men or even very tall men being bright.

There should, however, be a careful distinction drawn between tall men and gi-ants. Glantism has been demonstrated to be a disease. The victims suffer from a malady which produces an enlargement of the joints and this, more than any other growth of the bones, produces their extraordinary height. But men within certain limits grow tall without suffering decreased or absorbed mentality. It will not do to denounce the tall man when the world has seen so many examples of his being able to hold his own.

come to the front oftener is that they are as modest as they are extended. Little men usually bustle about to such an ex-tent that people believe that they make up in width of views what they lack in to be overlooked, they simply overdo the thing and make those whose command of the horizon is larger believe that they must get out of the way or the little felill run over them. The tall man is always looking down on some one, but if anyone believes that it is a comfortable situation he should get himself into it for once and discover how unpleasant it is to carry on conversation with the assistance of a telephone neck. It is this excru-ciating experience that makes the tall man, as a rule, reticent. His reticence is mistaken for pride, pride is believed to be the evidence of doubt of his own powers, doubt proves deficiency. Deficiency in the tall man can arise from only one thingdevelopment of the body at the exepense development of the body at the exepense of the brain and nervous system. Hence the short man easily arrives at the conclusion that the tall man is a misfit, and that he is the only perfect being growing. Ferfection being accorded him, he might easily conquer the world, but he always spoils his chances by marrying a tall woman, who holds him back. This is the only reason why the men under five feet six have not already exterminated those over five feet nine.

Talking Dogs.

From The New York Press.

Perhaps the most intelligent dog in Washington was owned by Mr. Korzebue, the Russian minister. It is an Eskimo, a descendant of the famous dogs owned by Lieutenant Peary. It got a fail last spring which resulted in a slight lameness. The dog was placed on a soft mattress and tended with the most loving care.

The injury was such a small affair that the physician began to wonder at the slowness of the recovery. After a few days he could find nothing wrong with the creature, who had a good appetite and was appurently well, only he refused to rise from his couch and walk. At last the physician made up his mind that it was a deliberate case of sham; that the dog enjoyed the care he got as an invalid so much that he was loath to go back to his old life. So one day his doctor put him on his feet, spoke sharply to him and congratulated himself on the conclusion that he had come to when he saw the animal walk off with the utmost ease.

Washington is the home of another wonhimself on the conclusion that he mad come to when he saw the animal walk off with the utmost ease.

Washington is the home of another wonder in the shape of a dog. It is a pug owned by Miss Ellis. One is almost afraid to announce what its chief accomplishment is, but, impossible as it may sound, the actual fact is the dog is a talking dog, and says "Mamma" with as much distinctness as talking dolls display. It is a marvel of a dog, wise beyond belief, and, although it does not say anything but "Mamma," it looks as though it could say almost anything if it had a mind to.

Care of the teeth of dogs forms an important branch of medical treatment, Many dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly, and, of course, nearly all old dogs have their teeth cleaned regularly.

When Booth's Captor Was in Atlanta.

The other day, while glancing over the telegraph columns of The Constitution my eyes fell upon a brief dispatch announcing the death in New York of Major Edward P. Doherty, the commander of the party which pursued and captured J. Wilkes Booth, the assassin of President

The news item stated very few facts of interest in connection with Doherty's lines which summarized the historic deeds of this once famous man I found myself recalling the days when he walked our streets and was a familiar figure in our

It was about thirty years ago when Booth's captor made his appearance in At-lanta. He was stationed here, at the old barracks, with the force which was kept here in the reconstruction days, when Georgia was a military district and our people were under bayonet rule.

He was then a lieutenant, if I am not mistaken; but in a short time he was promoted as a part of his reward for captur-

When I saw him for the first time he was lounging about the old National ho-tel, which was then the headquarters of the military element of our population. There was nothing in his personal appearance to attract attention. He was a man of medium height, with a beefy face and a black mustache. Perhaps he was then about thirty years old, but the ex-posure of his four years' service in the field had given him such a weather-beaten look that it was difficult to guess at his

In the brilliant circle of officers-many of them famous fighters—who met every day at the old National, Doherty was the most He had been stationed here some weeks before the citizens heard that he was the captor and indirectly the slayer of Booth.

When the fact leaked out public curiosity was excited, and whenever the lieu-tenant appeared on the streets he was stared at from one end of the town to

The young officer enjoyed the social side rades from the barracks forming friendships with our civilians, and obtaining in troductions to some of the Atlanta belles he decided to follow their example.

Why not? He was good looking, well educated, and he stood well as a soldier and a gentleman. Why not get on friendly terms with the ex-rebels and meet them on an equal footing in society? It was easy for him to ask this question, but the answer disappointed him.

The Atlanta young ladies who casually met him and permitted him to be introduced cut him the next time they met They had been informed that he was the man who captured Booth.

One very popular young lady unguardedly allowed Doherty to pay her a call one evening with one of her gentleman friends.

The officer made a very good impression, but he never found the young lady at home after that. Her brothers had given her a pointer about the Booth affair, and she came very near ordering the door to be forever closed to the gentleman who had so thoughtlessly introduced the obnoxious

But the uppopularity of the lieutenant sides with Lincoln's assassin. It meant that our people had an old-fashion-ed prejudice against a man who received what is called blood money. They had heard that Doherty had pocketed a large sum as his reward for hunting Booth to his death, and there were many southerners who denounced his conduct as unsoldierly, sordid and mean.
"Booth deserved death," said an ex-confederate who was discussing the matter "but the fellow who hunted down the wretch and allowed him to be slaughtered in that burning barn, and then accepted money for his share in the cowardly business is not a man of the right Whether right or wrong, this was the

One of the bravest young men who ever wore the gray, an ex-colonel, I think, took an intense dislike to the lieutenant. Of course he had never met him in a so-ial way. That was an impossibility. The mere suggestion of such a thing would have provoked a fight.

The ex-confederate was one of our so-clety leaders. He was utterly without fear, handsome as an ideal here and one of the nost eloquent gentlemen of his day. He was frequently at the Nationa with a select few of the federal officers

Then Doherty would change his seat or take a walk around the block.

At another time he would be looking over the register when the flery colonel we march up to the counter, rudely jostle him and pull the register away from him. Again, the colonel would make remarks of an insulting nature about Doherty to his friends, within earshot of the lieutenant, with the evident intention of provoking a row.

The lieutenant, however, had his temper under perfect control. He had made up his mind not to have any trouble about the Booth affair, and during his stay here he never allowed himself to be dragged in a difficulty, though there were hot-headed youngsters who were constantly annoying and insulting him.

His promotion to the rank of major did not tempt him to remain in the army. He left the service many years ago and accepted an important and lucrative municipal offer in New York city.

He was commander of Veteran Post No. 435, Grand Army of the Republic, for five years, and his funeral was attended by the post in a body and by many other Grand Army men and the survivors of his old regiment, the Seventy-first New York.

Doherty entered the union army at the beginning of the war in the Seventy-first New York volunteers, with whom he fought in the first battle of Bull Run. He man on the southern circuit can win $3,000 or more if he has continued cuccess. Races for Tonight.

The races tonight will by all means be the best that have ever been run in At-lanta. The track here is counted among the very finest in the world and there is nothing to prevent the men from making of the circuit on account of the large num-ber of people and the excellent facilities, and the men will do their very best here. The races are competitive and this makes them extremely interesting. The men do not show favoritism among themselves, and it is a case of every man for himself. Each man is doing his best to win the prizes at stake and so long as they are fair they let nothing stand in their way.

Jay Eaton, one of the crack riders of this country, will appear on the southern circuit tonight for the first time. Jay is a clever racer and has friends all over the country. He is a recer of a mean the country. He is a racer of no mean ability and it is expected that he will make the other boys hustle. It is expected that the famous Butler prothers, Nat and Tom, will probably join the circuit in Atlanta, but this is not certain. The Butler boys made fine reputations on the national circuit last year and their presence on the southern circuit would add interest to the racing. Tommie Cooper, one of the favorites of last year's national circuit, is in Savannah and may join the southern circuit in a short while. It is said that he is not in prime condition just at present and will not venture on the track until he has done more training. It is likely that Eddie Baid may join the circuit, and with him and Cooper and the Butler brothers, the southern circuit would be better than was the circuit of the north last year. The men now on the circuit are doing fine work and it is thought that they could hold their own with the riders of the national circuit. One advantage they would have is the fact that they are used to the Coliseum tracks, while the national chasers are accustomed to riding on thoutdoor tracks.

Circuits Will Combine. Jack Prince, the manager of the south-ern circuit, has been in correspondence with Mott, of the national circuit, and arrangements have about been completed for the national circuit to combine with the southern circuit in Montgomery, April 29th. The schedule is that the national chasers will go one round on the Collseum tracks and leave the southern circuit in Atlanta April 11th and take a straight shoot for Jacksonville, where they will race. From Jacksonville the national fellows will continue on the circuit already mapped out for There seems to be no danger that all the fast riders will leave the southern circuit and go in the national chasers. The crack men who are now going the rounds here are pleased with the work they have been doing and most of them have announ their intention of staying with Prince. The men are pleased with the south and even better pleased with the tracks. They like the idea of being able to run off their races rain or shine and of being able to practice under all kinds of atmospheric conditions.

A Railroad Without Cars.

From Cassier's Magazine.
In the forest of the Bridal Veil Lumbering Company, at Bridal Veil, in Oregon, there is a railroad which does business without cars. Hauling great logs from a log-pond to the saw mill is the nature of business, and the train, so-called, is made up of an ordinary locomotive and a string of logs, each one as large in diameter, and some even larger, than the boiler of the engine. Boards are nailed to the sleepers between the rails and on these the logs slide. Except on descending grades, the boards are greased, and the train moves at great speed. Where the road is level or slightly ascending the engine pulls the logs, and where it is descending it holds them back. At the mills of the company the manufactured lumber, regardless of size, is run into a flume, and this is carried about

HERE THURSDAY

The University Men of Two States To Meet on the Diamond.

KEYSTONE MEN ARE COMING

They Will Tackle the Athens Men Before a Large Crowd.

BOTH GANGS ARE IN FINE TRIM FOR PLAY

Game Will Be an Exciting One in Every Detail and Both Teams Are Confident of Victory.

Thursday will bring the great game of baseball between the University of Georgia and the University of Pennsylvania. All arrangements have been made and the men are waiting for the call of time when the champion college teams of the east and the champions of the south will meet.

In every detail this game will be notable. For some years it has been the endeavor of the Athens men to secure a game with a northern college, and in view of the fact that Pennsylvania lays ciaim to the best ball playing, especial effort was made to get a game with them. Last fall the challenge was issued and the men from the Key Stone took it up. The training of the Pennsylvania team has been done with special reference to the game to be played here Inursday, and the university boys have put themselves in the condition for the event. Incy have been under the care of Hugh Jennings, the :amous shortstop of the Orioles. During his stay in Athens he brought the man up to a high point of excellence.

Sanford, who will pitch for the Georgia mea is considered the most remarkable amateur pitcher in the south. He has had flattering offers from several teams but sticks to his college nine. Three Atlanta boys are with the team-pink of condition, and those who are back-ing them say they won't do a thing to the fellows from Pennsylvania. The Keystone men are equally confident. In the games they have played this year they have been remarkably successful and their record in every line is good.

Excursion from Athens. The people of Athens are preparing a big excursion for the day. A special train will be run and the whole town is preparing to make the trip. The whole body of students will probably come and the day will be a memorable one in the history of the institution.

In addition to the crowd from Athens, large parties are being organized in dif-ferent tewns rear Atlanta, and as far down as Macon the people are preparing to come. All of the old university men are aroused and will come out wearing the red and black to yell for their team. As a secial event, the game will bring out all of the smart turnouts, and a great crewd will be there. The game will be called at 3 o'clock sharp in Brisbine park.

Rome, Ga., April 11 .- (Special.)-The first baseball game of the season was played here yesterday between Rome and Cedar-

Baseball at Rome.

Cedartown won by a score of 23 to 11 Baseball is a very attractive sport to Romans and they are rather sore over the defeat of their boys.

IS THE SULTAN A FRENCHMANT

A Romantle Story Which Is Full of Interest at This Time. From The New York Herald.

Is the present sultan of Turkey of French descent? This question is agitating many persons in France at this moment, and the utmost efforts are being made to obtain a satisfactory answer to it. Foremost among those interested is Dr. Cabanes. He is satisfied that there is French blood in the sultan's veins, and he is spending all his time in an endeavor to prove his case.

The historical data on the subject, though few, are precise enough. The trouble is that it is almost impossible to say where histo ends and legend begins. The only satis lieve that documents may yet be unearthed which will clear up the entire mystery. The heroine of the story is a Mile. Bazillais. In her girihood she was a bosom friend of Mile. de Tascher de la Pagerie. One day an old mulatto woman told the fortune of these two girls. She told Mile, de la Pager.e that she would marry twice, and that her second husband would raise her to a position loftier than that of any queen, and she told Mile. Bazillais that she, ruler.

The girls were surprised at the old wo The girls were surprised at the old woman's words, but time showed that she had not prophested vaguety. Mile, de la Pagerie did marry tw.ce, and did rise to a position lofter than that of any queen. By ner first marriage she became the wife of the great Napoleon, and all the world heard of her as the Empress Josephine.

Mile, Bazillais also rose to great distinction. While she was taking a sea voyage she was captured by Turkish pirates and, being sold by them, became an inmate of the imperial seragilo. Her great beauty soon attracted the sultan's attention, and she became his favorite and in due time bore him a son, who succeeded his father as sultan.

she became his favorite and in due time bore him a son, who succeeded his father as sultan.

In this way is explained the introduction of many French customs at the court of Constantinople. These, it is said, were due to the influence of Mile. Bazillais, who, furthermore, took care to train her son as far as possible, after the French style. The latter after becoming sultan sent an envoy to France with instructions to find out all he could about the Bazillais family. The envoy, however, was unsuccessful in his search, for the reason that the Bazillais were strictly religious people and would have nothing to do with the representative of such a heretic as the sultan. With these facts in his possession Dr. Cabanes went to the Turkish embassy in Paris and applied there for further information. He was told very courteously that the embassy had no inside information on the subject, but he was assured that a search would be made in the archives for official documents. The officials at the embassy also admitted that they had heard the story before Dr. Cabanes went home, expecting that an immediate search would be made in the archives, but as yet he has heard nothing further from the embassy.

He next applied for information to Mr.

has heard nothing further from the embassy.

He next applied for information to Mr. Paul de Regia, a writer who is well acquainted with Constantinople and political life in Turkey, and received in reply the following letter:

"My Dear Colleague—There is a tradition in the imperial harem at Constantinople that Sultan Mahmoud, father fo Abdal-Medjid and grandfather of Sultan Mourad V, who was the brother of the reigning sultan. Abdul-Hamid II, was the son of a French woman who had been captured by piratts. It is even said that this beautiful and, inteligent French woman exercised so much influence over her son, Mahmoud, that the re forms which he accomplished while sultan were mainly due to her."

Dr. Cabanes next made a search for members of the Bazillais family. He heard that there were two persons at Nantes who could give him the desired information, and he wrote to them.

One of them, M. Clericeau, an architect and a relative of the Bazillais by marriage, sent him in reply the family tree of the Bazillais, and told him that the last member of the family, a girl, was born in 1874 and had died, married, in 1834. He added:

"There is unquestionably some truth in the story which you tell me. I have heard it all before, and, even when I was a child. I remember very clearly that I heard my parents talk about the girl who, on account of her great beauty, was presented to the emperor at Nantes (in 1888, I believe), and who subsequently went to Turkey and became the favorite sultans. I remember this story very distinctly.

"But was this girl a Bazilliais? I hardly think so, for the last member of the family (a girl) was, as we see, born in 1749, and consequently her age and beauty could hardly have proved very attractive to the emperor in 1808. Moreover, she died at Nantes, leaving five children. Could this sultana have been one of her daughters? I do not think so, for the reason that she would not have borne the name of Bazillais. Anyhow, I intend to look for light on the subject."

In connection with this story a leading French journal relates a curious incident. "We have heard a story," says this journal, "that Sultan Abdul-Medjid, when he came to Parls in 1867, alluded, while conversing with Napoleon III, to a certain relationship which existed between them."

If this be true, it is probable that some light might be obtained from a search of the records of the Taschet de la Pagerie family. For how could Sultan Abdul-Medjid the elated to Napoleon III except through the Empress Josephine?

WITH AGASSIZ IN BRAZIL.

he Quick, Nervous Manner of the Naturalist Made Him Very Interesting.

rom The Chicago News. 'I was in Brazil when Professor Agassis made his expedition there in behalf of the Harvard scientific school," remarked a friend lately to a New York Post man. "At that time I was associated with certain other engineers, English and American, who were directing the construction of Dom Pedro's railroads. The emperor, himself a lover of science, had given Agassiz a cordial reception and when the expedition began its journey into the interior I was one of the several engineers detailed by him for an honorary escort. We knew the country and the language and bore the rank and uniform of Brazilian officers. This made it doubtless an agreeable ar-rangement for the professor and I recal those several weeks in camp with him as the most delightful I ever knew. His quick, nervous manner and bright talk rendered him a never-failing source and affability at once endeared him to every member of the party.

"The professor was particularly solicitou for a specimen of the horned frog, a broad, flat lizard, in fact, which is found in our own southwest country, but in Brazil atown southwest country, but in Brazil at-tains unusual size. All of us were anxious to gratify him. One morning just as the cook was serving breakfast some one ap-peared outside with an immense frog of the kind desired. We were taking our places at table, and at a sign from me the cook intercepted the bearer, substituted the frog for buckwheat cakes between two platters, and placed it covered before the pro-fessor. The tent was filled with the appetizing odor of the buckwheats and, talk-ing in his bright, vivacious way, Agassiz turned the cover to attack his pile of cakes Out jumped the frog from the cloth into the professor's lap. Agassiz, with a startled, delighted cry, was on his knees in moment, scrambling under the table, where he triumphantly captured the prize. In the laugh which followed none joined more heartily than he.

"A tank of water stood in the dining tent wherein rare and curious fish were placed for the professor's leisurely examination Among these one day was an uncommon specimen, somewhat like our pike or jackfish. It was a foot long and its mouth was armed with rows of sharp teeth. The pro-fersor, very near-sighted, was bending close down to examine this, when suddenly the fish struck up and seized him firmly by the nose. Here was a demonstration of its unusual characteristic. The fish was a treasure. It was now doubly valuable as a museum specimen. The professor was in ecstacy. In the midst of the next meal he was displaying his scars, proud as a Ger-man student, and nothing would do but that he must show up the teeth of the fish. But the fish was gone. You have just eaten him, sir, the cook explained. The professor's disappointment was too apparent. He might possibly secure another specimen, but hardly one which would leap out of the tank to seize him by the nose even if he cared to venture the experiment."

YANK AND JOHNNY REB.

A Pathetic Incident of the Late Civil War. From The Lexington Leader.

William Wilkerson, who was for many years jailer of Fayette county, and who was noted for his fidelity to truth, related the following pathetic incident of heroism which he witnessed shortly after the battle of Richmond, Ky., in 1862:

"A son of my friend, Hon. Cassius M. Clay, was killed in the field at Richmond, and it was my duty to visit the battlefield to identify the body and take it to his father's home. While riding slowly over the scenes of the battle I heard groans. which I was sure came from a cornfield near at hand. Looking down the corrows I soon discovered two wounded sol diers lying about forty yards apart. One was a federal and the other was a con-federate. A cannon ball had broken and terribly mangled both of the confederate's legs, while the federal was snot through the body and thigh. "'I am dying for water," I heard the federal say, just as I discovered them. His words sounded as if they came from a parched mouth. "I have some water in my canteen. You are welcome to a drink if you will come here,' said the confederate, who had feebly raised his head from the ground to look at his late enemy when he heard his pitiful cry for water. ... "'I couldn't move to save my life, ry for water.

"'I couldn't move to save my life,' groaned the federal, as he dropped his head to the ground, while his whole body quivered with agony.

"Then I beheld an act of heroism which held me spellbound until it was too late for me to give the assistance I should have rendered. The confederate lifted his head again and took another look at his wounded foe, and I saw an expression of tender pity come over his pain-distorted face as he said:

"Hold out a little longeg, yank, and I'll try to come to you." Then the brave fellow, by digging his fingers in the ground and catching hold of the cornatalks, painfully dragged himself to the federal's side, the blood from his mangled legs making a red trail the entire distance. The tears ran down my cheeks like rain, and, out of sympathy for him, I groaned every time he moved, but I was so lost to everything except the fellow's heroism that I did not once think of helping him.

"When the painful journey was finished he offered his canteen to the federal, who took it and drank eagerly, the water seeming to sizzle as it passed down his parched throat. Then, with a deep sigh of relief, he reached out to the confederate, and it was plain to see as they clasped hands and looked into each other's eyes that whatever of hate may have rankled once in the hearts of these men had low given place to mutual sympathy and love. Even while I watched them I saw the confederate's body quiver as if in a spasm of pain, and when his head dropped to the ground I knew that a hero had crossed the dark river. The federal kissed the dead hero's hand repeatedly and cried like a child until I had him removed to the hospital, where he, too, died the next day."

If you stand a palm in the window be careful that you turn the pot around every day, so that one side of the plant does not get the sole benefit of the sun's rays. And as regarding the pot, be sure that you get one sufficiently large, as otherwise your beautiful palm will soon show signs of falling. When the bilnds are drawn and the gas lighted, remove your plants to the conservatory or other cool place, as few things are so damaging as artificial light.

One of the greatest palm fanciers in London is said to have discovered that the leaves should be washed, not with pure water, but with milk and water, which has a wonderful effect of preserving them, and preventing the appearance of the brown spots, which are so disfiguring.

For this second coat I find newspaper as good as anything that can be used. Perhaps the smell of printer's ink helps the tar do its work, or it may be because newspaper is porous and allows the tar odor to come through more readily. One of the most curious forms of gamb-ling in the world is "rain gambling," which, says The New York Herald, at this season of the year, is at its height in Calcutta. The principal rain gambling den is in Cot of the year, is at its height in Calcutta. The principal rain gambling den is in Cotton street, Burra Bazaar.

No one who has not visited the place can have any conception of the vast crowds which at every hour of the day and far into the night pass in and out.

The great majority are Mawaris, who are born speculators, but there are as well plenty of well-to-do Europeans, Eurasians, Jews, Armenians and Greeks, and women, too. All swarm into the small courtyard where this strange form of gambling is carried on, through a narrow entrance barely three feet wide. The courtyard is about 200 feet square. The far-famed tank with a spout falling into the courtyard is the one spot where all eyes are fixed. The tank stands at the edge of a second floor roof. It is about six feet broad by four feet wide and nine inches deep, with the spout opening inward, some three or four inches from the bottom. From this it will be seen that it requires a pretty heavy downpour for at least ten minutes to cause the spout to flow. Intermittent drizzles, which partly fill this tank, do not count, as the shower to fill it must pour down uninterruptedly, and then the bets are won or lest.

Chances are taken either for or sganst the spout running. A gray-haired, wizened old man is the owner of the den, and there is another similar place across the road, only smaller. On the roof, over the fifth floor, there is a small, square wards tower, in which are stationed five or six men, whose duty it is to scan the borizon closely and report on the formation of rain clouds. On these reports the odds rise or fall.

A bet made and won one day is always paid the following morning. Everything seems to be "on the square," and, indeed, there is little chance for cheating. The odds range as high as 1 to 75 on some days, even in the rainy season. Many have made a fortume in a single day. One pusses it is not one cleanific methods.

Sergeant Stanton Brings His Wounded Leader from the Battlefield.

BRAVERY OF HIGHEST ORDER

The following correspondence between W. L. Stanton, a worthy citizen of College Park, and W. H. Logan, of Young Harris, Ga., son of an old war comrade of Mr. Stanton, recounts a most interesting incident of Sherman's march through Georgia.

tant one, and the result caused the retire-ment of General Johnston from his power-ful position at Resaca. The fight was at Tanner's ferry, on the Oostanaula river, and General Avery was defending the front with a cavalry brigade and a battery, with General John T. Morgan, now United States senator, a mile in the rear with his cavalry brigade, and General W. H. T. Walker's division of infantry at Calhoun, two and one-half miles away, to call on if necessary.

Tanner's ferry is two and a half miles nearer to Calhoun, Johnston's base then, than to Reseca, where Johnston's army was fighting, and Sherman, unable to drive Johnston from Beases.

The movement was successful. The federal corps was too much for Avery's brigade, and had forced the crossing before Morgan and Walker could get there, and Johnston ordered an immediate retreat to Caihoun. General Avery flost about half of his brigade in the battle.

General Avery speaks in the highes terms of Captain Logan and Mr. Stan

General Avery speaks in the highest terms of Captain Logan and Mr. Stanton, whom he pronounces as among the best soldiers of his old regiment, the Fourth Georgia cavalry.

"Young Harns, Ga. April 25, 1895.—Mr. W. L. Stanton, College rark, Ga. Dear Sir. After a considerable search, I have found out your address. Q. Watts gave it to me a few days ago. Mr. Stanton, I do not suppose that you know anything about me. Do you recollect carrying a man off the battlefield by the name of W. R. Logan? I am his son. I have often heard mother speak of you. And I have slways had a desire to see you. My father died several years ago. I was very smail. I just can reconsect him. My mother died when I was about tweive years old. Therefore, I have been left in the world alone, to battle for myself. Mr. Stanton, I want to ask of you a favor. I want you to tell me where, when and how my father got wounded in the war. I cannot find out by anyone here. I want you to please give me a full description how it came about, and where it was; in what battle was it, if any?

"Mr. Stanton, I feel grateful to you for having saved my father's life. You will always have a friend in northeast Georgia in whom you can connide. I hope that I will get to see you some time. It would be a great satisfaction to get to talk to you about my father.

"Please answer this soon. Very truly, "W. H. LOGAN."

"W. H. LOGAN."

"College Park, Ga., June 28, 1895.—Mr. W. H. Logan, Blairsville, Ga. My Dear Sir: Your letter of April 28th was duly received and appreciated beyond expression. You must not think that I had coased to love and venerate the name of your father by my long delay in replying to your letter. You will see from the enclosed history of the Southern Baptist college, and the struggle I am having to found this institution, that I have not had time to do justice to the subject about which you desired, information. Then I was overwhelmed with gratitude to God that some one in this generation should rise up with expressions of appreciation of what a humble solder did thirty-one years ago in discharge of his duty on the battlefield of the lost cause. You have no idea how it nerved me for the struggle through which I am now passing.

"In the spring of 1864, shortly after the battle at hesaca, the right wing of the federal army, by a flank movement, drove our command across the river about four miles below Calhoun, in Gordon county, Georgia. It was evident to Colonel Avery, who was in command of the forces on our left wing, that the enemy was concentrating his forces at this point to force a passage of the river. About noon of the day on which this movement was discovered, ing his forces at this point to force a passage of the river. About noon of the day on which this movement was discovered, re-enforcements began to arrive. The Fourth Georgia cavalry, Colonel I. W. Avery's regiment, to which we belonged with Company G, of which your father, W. R. Logan, was captain, was ordered to dismount. Your father was instructed by Colonel Avery to take two or three companies of the regiment and go to a forry on our right wing, and in front of the enemy's left wing, who were rapidly advancing toward the river, while Colonel Avery, with the main body of the regiment, advanced to meet the federals, who had constructed rafts with breastworks on them, to protect their men, and put the rafts to floating down a large creek that emptied into the river on the opposite side.

"This was not the first time Captain Logan was intrusted with the command of forces to defend an important position. I was in the front rank at the head of the column by your father's side. Never will I forget his works of cheen and the column by your father's side. was in the front rank at the head of the column by your father's side. Never will I forget his words of cheer and the courage he displayed as we moved down the slope through the open field to the river while the yankee artillery was playing on us with a terrific shower of shot and shell from the opposite side of the river. Soon we were formed on the river bank and from behind trees and fences engaged the from benind trees and fences engaged the enemy at short range, who were on the op-posite bank. It was not long before the report came that the yankees had crossed the river below. At this news Captain Lothe river below. At this news Captain Logan ordered a man to go ddwn the river to an elevated place in the open field to see if there was danger of his command being cut off. The man hesitated, saying it would be certain death. Your father mounted the eminence, saying he never requested his men to go where he would no go himself. He had not more than reached the place before we were ordered to fall back. This we did without much correspon, every man for himself, until we to fall back. This we did without much ceremony, every man for himself, until we reached the woods some 200 yards away. Just as we entered the woods one of Company A passed by me and reported that our captain had been shot down in the field near the river. I immediately sent word to Lieutenant Dean, who was the next officer in command. Upon his arrival he inquired of me why I had not brought Captain Logan out. I told him I did not know that he was wounded until I reached the woods. He then wanted to know—with an oath—why I did not bring him out as soon as I heard of it. I immediately gave my gun to another man and challenged him to go with me. This he declined to do, knowing that it would have been certain knowing that it would have been certain death to us both to venture out in the field at that time, as the fire of an entire death to us both to venture out in the field at that time, as the fire of an entire yankee regiment would have been concentrated on us. Though I was only a sergeant, I felt that for a short time I was in command of the company. I then told Lieutenant Dean to detail two men to stay with me and I would bring Captain Logan out as soon as things quieted down. It was then about two hours by sun. The time passed off slowly as we walted for an opportunity to venture to the place where the prostrate form of our beloved captain lay. We were not only anxious to bring him out and rescue him from a yankee bospital, but to see if his wounds were mortal. In the meantime I detailed one of my men to go up the river and bring back horses for us to go out on, but before he returned. James Taft, the only remaining man, and I captured two horses and tied them in the woods to use in taking us out. The sun was nearly down when we crawled down the lane leading to the ferry and cautiously crossed the fence and went to where your father was lying. We found his thigh was broken, but he was cheerful and appreciated the risk we were taking to rescue him. He save orders that if the yankee pickets epened fire on us to lie down with him on the ground. We then commenced the work of carrying him out by lifting him on the limb that was not hurt and raising him under each arm. But we found it impossible to raise him high enough to keep the foot of the broken leg from dragging on the ground; this gave him great pain, which made him so faint that he asked us to lay him down. I insisted that we be allowed to continue; that we must take him out where he could be cared for by loving hands and keep the yankees from capturing him. He said all right, he could bear the pain, which was beyond endurance except by one of his fortitude. I suppose we must have been fifteen or twenty minutes going to the woods. When they were reached Lieutenant Parkerson, of our command, arrived with a mounted detachment and we were soon with our regiment. That night was the last time I ever saw your father. I regretted so much that I was not at home when he rode from Union county to Gordon to see me, more than 100 miles. This was after the war was a great favorite in the

"Your father was a great favorite in the command; very much beloved by his company. He was promoted from second lieutenant to the captaincy for his bravery at the battle of Chickamauga, or in the campaign through East Tennessee and around Knoxville. "Major Stewar, who was in command of the regiment after Colonel Avery was wounded, presented me with the only Tex-as saddle the Fourth regiment drew. I appreciated that and the applause of the regiment and our company. Yet I prized your letter more than all the commenda-tion I received for trying to perform my tion I received for trying to perform my duty faithfully. God bless you and help you to be as faithful to duty as your lanted father, who was my beloved frien and captain. You must come to see me.
I will be glad to welcome the son of W. R.

OTHER DAYS RECALLED.

. Alger Caused the First Rupture Between Blaine and Harrison.

From The Chicago Times-Herald.
General Russell A. Alger has in his possession a letter from James G. Blaine-not typewritten, but penned in the characteristic chirography of the Maine statesman-which would be interesting reading if it were intrusted to public print.

In accepting the secretaryship of war General Alger has achieved the height of his political ambitions. Though he was a candidate for presidential honors in the candidate for presidential motions in the memorable struggle which ended in the nomination of Harrison, he was not dis-appointed in the decision of the conven-tion. General Alger did not expect to be named as the standard bearer of his party. His candidacy, however, gave him a national prominence which he has retained since that contest, and this was the prime motive which actuated the Detroit statesman in permitting his name to be used.

He was not disappointed in the Chicago convention, but he was most bitterly disappointed shortly afterwards. He contributed as much as any other man in the country to secure the election of President country to secure the election of President Harrison, and was slated for appointment to the war portfollo. The matter was arranged in Indianapolis, whither General Alger went in response to a summons from the president elect. Immediately after that conference General Alger gave me an interview in which he freely discussed national political affairs, but frankly requested that nothing be said about the war portfolio until the announcement of his apportfolio until the announcement of his ap itment should be given out in Indian apolis.

That announcement never came. Instead of it word was Louight to Detroit that General Harrison had been confronted by certain unlooked for complications which might make the appointment of General Alger very embarrassing to the incoming administration. General Alger to time administration. General Alger lost no time had heard, and said that if his appointmen would embarrass the administration in any way he would relieve General Harrison of that complication by withdrawing his name from further consideration.

President Harrison explained that "geographical considerations" rendered it impossible to give Michigan a cabinet representative, and thanked General Alger for his courtesy, adding that if the Detroit man had in view any candidate for a recondary office he would be glad to make the appointment. General Alger said he would be gratified if his friend, Colonel Henry Duffield, of Detroit, were appointed solicitor general. President Harrison thanked him for the suggestion and the conference endpuffield, of Detroit, were appointed solicitor general. President Harrison thanked him for the suggestion and the conference ended. Duffield never was named, however. When it was given out unofficially that Alger was to be Harrison's secretary of war, James G. Blaine wrote to General Alger announcing that he was to be Harrison's premier and expressing his warm gratification over the sejection of the betroit man. Afterwards, when it became known that Alger had been turned down, Bisine wrote another letter to his Michigan friend. It was red hot. And the language used toward the nation's chief executive was hardly what would ordinarily be looked for from one's principal counselor. That Blaine letter, during the last eight years, has been the principal ray that has lighted the gloom of General Alger's political aspirations.

Blaine mally left the cabinet and entered the fleid for the presidential nomination against his chief. The Alger incident may not have figured materially in bringing about this outcome, but it was the first rupture between Harrison and Blaine.

General Alger is a "self-made man," if any one ever justified such a term, He began life without a dollar and has earned by hard work every dollar that fortune has given him.

Today General Alger is a millionaire;

by hard work every dollar that fortune has given him.

Today General Alger is a millionaire; how much more than a millionaire it is difficult to say, for his wealth is invested in busy manufactories and mills, giving employment to thousands of American workingmen. He is not a plutocrat, but a business man. He has won a national reputation for his open-handed philanthropy, and has always been especially popular among the laboring classes. From his youth General Alger has taken a deep and active interest in political affairs, and has been honored by the voters of his state by election and re-election as governor. He is an enthusiastic G. A. R., man, and has served as national commander of that organization.

In statesmanship General Alger is not a das national commander of that organization.

In statesmanship Generel Alger is not a "jingo." He is American to the core, with a healthy regard for all things American and sufficient backbone to make his sentiments effective. He will bring to the office great business ability and a thorough knowledge of military affairs, both theoretical and practical.

The following story, told of General Alger, may serve to throw a light upon the personal characteristics of the man.

Just before young Alger was called away by the exigencies of war his finances were so low that he borrowed a few dollars from a friend. Several years later Alger left the service, and with the small sum of money which he brought home invested in a heavy fur overcoat and a watch and chain. About the first person he met after donning his new possessions was the creditor of former years, whose whereabouts in the meantime were unknown. Alger greeted his old friend cordially and instantly slipped off the evercoat and handed it to him, together with the watch and chain.

"Just keep those," he said. "I'm going to work up in the woods. Some time I'll redeem them with the money I owe you."

Now that the courtmartial is over and all s quiet in the Atlanta Artillery, the members of the famous battery are wondering what the report of the court contained. Very tew of those who heard the evidence in the case are of the opinion that the court will do the whitewash act. But at the same time it is not believed that anything severe will be done.

The members of the court are under oatl not to divulge the sentence until it has been made public by the proper authorities and for that reason the artillerymen will not know their fate for some time yet. Though the evidence in the case was very strong against Captain Kempton, there are some points in his favor which cause many to think that he will not be very severely dealt with.

His action through the entire affair is one thing that undoubtedly made a favorable impression on the minds of the court. When the matter was first brought to the attention of Captain Kempton he at once communicated with the adjutant general's office and asked for advice and information

In less than three days after the petition had been presented to him a full report of the meeting at which it was done was in the hands of the authorities together with what other information could be obticles on the trouble in the battery Captain Kempton was besieged with newspaper men, but to none of them would he give an interview nor would he discuss the matter. In short his action throughout the entire occurrence was truly military, and this is probably the one point that will go down strongly in his favor.

So far as the men are concerned there are few who believe they will be dismissed from the service. Though the signing of the petition was a serious matter, there were circumstances and conditions surrounding it that were carefully looked into

The two men who were at the head of the affair were Sergeant Thurman and Private Sanges, and these two will probably be dealt with separately from the ther men. They have no fears.

It is believed by many who are interested n military affairs that the holding of the courtmartial will mark an epoch in the military history of this state. It is be-lieved that it will cause military law to be more carefully looked after and have the effect to cause better discipline.

The court that met here was one out of a hundred and the men seemed to have been placed in the service for the very work they performed in Atlanta. They worked to-gether well and all knew their business horoughly.

As president of the court Colonel A. R.

Lawton won new laurels for himself and made many friends among the military folks of this city. He conducted the court in an admirable manner and his dignity when rendering a decision on a discussed added impressiveness to the whole

"BLEST BE THE TIE THAT BINDS." How the Famous Gospel Hymn Originated.

A pathetic and yet charming story is told of the origin of the well-known hymn "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." It was written by the Rev. John Fawcett, an English Baptist, who died in 1817, having spent nearly sixty years in the ministry. In 1772, after a few years spent in pastoral work, he was called to London to succeed the Rev. Dr. Gill. His farewell sermon had been preached near Moinsgate, in Yorkshire; six or seven wagons stood loaded with his furniture and books, and all was ready for departure. But his loving people were heart-broken; men, women and children gathered and clung about him and his family with sad and tearful faces. Finally, overwhelmed with the sorrow of those they were leaving. Dr. Fawcett and his and gave way to grief.
"Oh. John!" cried Mrs. Fawcett at last,

"Nor I. either." returned her husband "and we will not go. The wagons shall be unloaded and everything put in its old and gratitude at this determination. Dr. Fawcett at once sent a letter to London explaining the case, and then resolutely returned to his work on a salary of less than $200 a year. This hymn was written o commemorate the event. When Mr. Coffing. a missionary at Aintab, in Armenia, set out in 1860 to explore the Taurus mountains, he was to pene-trate an entirely new and dangerous field. This fact was fully realized by the in-habitants of Aintab, and they gathered to the number of 1,500 at the roadside and bade farewell to the missionary and his family in the Armenian words of this hymn, written nearly a century before by the devoted Yorkshire preacher.

That Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood and relieves a vast amount of suf-fering is not a theory, but a well-known fact.

Mrs. Temple, the wife of the new arch-bishop of Canterbury, after making a call the other evening, entered what the suppos ed was her own carriage and asked the coachman to drive to the palace. The man promptly drove her to the Palace theater of varieties, and it was noted varieties, and it was with great difficulty that the good lady, who had never been in such a place in her life, was able to per-

SERVICE OF BLACKS TO BE GREAT EVENT

Lively Scene.

A BIG RELIGIOUS OVERFLOW

Air Is Heavily Ladened with Old-Time Negro Enthusiasm.

HUGE PLANS AMONG ATLANTA NEGROES

Walker, of Augusta, and E. R. Carter Expect To Make Things Hum for the Next Week.

The great revival, which will be conducted by the negro Baptists of the city, commences tonight and from the present out look it will no doubt surpass anything of the kind that has previously been held in the city. The outpouring of the spirit commenced at Friendship Baptist church, which is located on the corner of Mitchell and Haynes streets, and which is presided over by Rev. E. R. Carter.

Three weeks ago the members of the church began to take a more hearty interest in the services and even before the pastor was aware of such a thing he had genuine old-time revival on his hands. He lost no time in grasping the opportunity which providence had thrown in his path and as a result within the past two week 225 men and women have joined his church Of this number ninety-three have been baptized. Most of these were immersed on April 4th, and or that occasion Rev. Car-ter broke all records by putting the applicants under the water two at a time. He stood in the pool and waited for them to come down the aisle, and as they came he took one on each side and dipped then under, at the same time pronouncing the words of the baptismal ceremony. Yesterday morning the noted Prince Chechechi, who halls from the coast of Africa and who arrived in the city some weeks ago, was baptized. He will be given a li cense to preach and it is not improbable that he will help to conduct the revival. The remaining 162 converts will be baptized next Sunday morning at 4:30 o'clock. The hour was made early in the morning because the crowds which have in the past been present to witness the ceremony have been so large that it was impossible for the church to hold the people, and Rev. Carter thought that by making the hour early a great many of the people would not be held in the Moody tabernacle, and will continue for five nights. Rev. Walker, of Augusta, who is pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist church of that city, and who is editor of the negro department on The Morning News, will be present and will take an active part in the exercises.

Rev. Carter wishes it announced that special reserved seats, which will be set apart from those occupied by the colored people, will be reserved for those of the white people who wish to attend. He says that he desires all of the white people to attend who are able to do so.

The services will be conducted on the old time plan. No musicians will be in attend-ance and all of the music will be made by those who attend, and will consist of sine ng. If the services succeed as well at the tabernacle as they have at Friendship church, and there is no reason why they should not and every reason why they should succeed even better, it is likely that some very interesting scenes will be

THE ORIGINAL UNCLE SAM. A Contractor Who Furnished Government Supplies.

From St. Nicholas. government entered into a contract with a man by the name of Elbert Anderson to furnish supplies to the army. When the United States buys anything from a con-tractor, an inspector is always appointed to see that the goods are what the con-tract calls for, and that the government gets full value. In this case the govern-ment appointed a man by the name of Samuel Wilson, who was always called "Uncle Sam" by those who knew him. He inspected every package and cask that came from Elbert Anderson, the contrac-tor, and if he found that the contents were all right, the package or cask was marked all right, the package or cask was marked with the letters "E. A.—U. S.," the initials of the contractor and of the United States. The man whose duty it was to do this marking was a jovial sort of fellow, and when somebody asked him what these letters meant, he said they stood for Elbert Anderson and Uncle Sam. Everybody, including "Uncle Sam" Wilson himself, thought this was a very good joke; and by and by it got into print, and before the end of the war it was known all over the end of the war it was known all over the country, and that is the way the United States received its name of "Uncle Sam," Mr. Wilson, the original "Uncle Sam." died at Troy, N. Y., in 1854, at the age of eighty
